Times wins libel appeal

By ROGER STONEBANKS

The highest court in B.C. unanimously ruled today that a 1978 Victoria Times cartoon did not libel former Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm.

The decision of the five member B.C. Court of Appeal, headed by Chief Justice Nathan Nemetz, reverses a B.C. Supreme Court judgement by Mr. Justice F. Craig Munroe who ruled the Bob Bierman cartoon libelous and awarded Vander Zalm $3,500 damages.

The cartoon showed the minister pulling the wings off flies.

Vander Zalm, who is now municipal affairs minister, argued the cartoon implied he was a cruel and sadistic person who enjoyed inflicting suffering and torture on helpless people and a person not fit for the job.

The Times said the cartoon was not defamatory but if it was, then it was a fair comment on a matter of public interest.

Chief Justice Nemetz said it is obvious that most political cartoons have inherent in their satire a tendency to lower their subject in the estimation of the public.

But even if the cartoon was prima facie defamatory, the defence of fair comment was available in the circumstances.

"The three elements of the defence of fair comments are well known," he said.

"First, the matter must be recognizable to the ordinary reasonable man as a comment upon true facts and not as a bare statement of fact.

"Secondly, the matter commented upon must be one of public interest. There must, in short, be a public nexus between the matter and the person charicatured.

"In a case such as this the cartoonist may not intrude upon the private life of a public man, no matter how interesting such an intrusion may be to the public, nor may he expose a private person to unsought publicity."

Finally, he said, the comment must be fair in that it must represent an honest expression of the real view of the person making the comment.

Mr. Justice Nemetz said that Munroe applied the wrong legal test to the issue of fair comment.

In a libel action such as this, whether the defence of fair comment succeeds or not, rests on the trial judge drawing proper inferences from proven facts. The question of credibility did not necessarily arise and certainly did not arise in this case, Nemetz said.

"Accordingly, an appellate tribunal is in as good a position as the trial judge to draw the proper inferences," he said.

"Now as I have already noted, the act of putting oneself in the public arena tends to invite appraisal of one's public conduct. The evidence clearly shows that the minister was not unaware of the wide-spread publicity attending his public conduct over the period in question."

Nemetz said there were 16 instances of controversial statements and acts attributed to the minister by the defendants and each of them had received considerable publicity.

One was a 1975 statement that he would develop ways of dealing with welfare recipients who refused to "pick up their shovels."

Another was a 1978 comment by the minister that native Indians should return to their reserves because there was "more opportunity" there for them.

"Now one can approve or disapprove of these ministerial concerns but there is little doubt that these statements were provocative.

"It should not, therefore, have come to the minister as a surprise that these statements would become well-known to the public and that someone would respond to them. One such person was the defendant cartoonist."

Canada linked with network of Iran terror

Times News Services

TEHRAN — An Iranian magazine says its has evidence the RCMP and other federal agencies co-operated for at least a decade with SAVAK, the dreaded secret police of deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

The Farsi-language (Persian) magazine Iran — in a soon-to-be-published article confirmed in part by Iran's ambassador to Canada — says co-operation between the two police forces resulted in the deportation from Canada of students who were subsequently tortured by SAVAK.

A draft of the article, obtained by The Canadian Press, also says that SAVAK agents, with the knowledge of the Canadian government, were attached to the Iranian embassy in Ottawa, affording them diplomatic cover for spy operations on Iranian students.

Co-operation between the two police agencies also involved RCMP spying on Iranian students in Canada, with the information being passed on to SAVAK. In return, the RCMP was provided with information on Iranians travelling to Canada and those wishing to immigrate to Canada and on Canadians living in Iran.

In Ottawa, Iranian Ambassador Mohammad Adeli said the Canadian government was aware there were two SAVAK agents attached to the Iranian embassy.

However, Adeli said he didn't know if the RCMP and other Canadian officials worked with SAVAK to arrange deportations. "Of course there are some Iranians who were deported from Canada and they went directly back to the SAVAK torture chambers," he said.

RCMP Insp. Lloyd Larose said in a telephone interview today "we have no idea what's in that article. We want to sort out what is propaganda and what isn't."

The Iranian magazine, which has a circulation of about 20,000 and is distributed mostly to a university readership, quotes two former SAVAK agents as saying they had the complete co-operation of the RCMP in all matters.

Another SAVAK agent, identified only as an engineer named Omidi, is said to have confessed to spy activities while posing as a diplomat in Canada.

The man, arrested in Iran after the February, 1979,

Salisbury ripped by bombs

SALISBURY (Reuter) — Three bombs exploded in Salisbury overnight and police found and defused a fourth early today.

Three of the bombs, including the one which failed to go off, were planted at churches. The fourth blew apart a car in a black suburb killing at least two people.

The night of bombings injected a new tension into the capital, already shaken by a series of violent incidents in the run-up to pre-independence elections in which blacks will vote in less than two weeks.

While Salisbury authorities cleaned up the debris this morning, Lord Soames, Britain's interim colonial governor, was assembling a huge force of police and military in an effort to protect the elections from violence.

Throw out parking meters?

Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele today said Victoria should remove all parking meters to create more space for vehicles in the downtown core.

He said meters waste space because more and more small cars are taken up the 22-foot areas.

The parking problem is reaching crisis proportions because offices as well as stores are beginning to relocate in the suburbs because of staff parking problems.

"There is a shift towards new areas like McKenzie-Shelbourne where parking is plentiful. We must act quickly to keep the downtown area strong."

He offered two new solutions to the problem:

First, remove all parking meters and enforce a one-hour limit. This would allow cars to park closer together and would increase parking space by as much as 60 per cent.

Second, construct parkades under each new downtown building (of three storeys or more). Costs could be recovered through parking fees and by the reduced expense of installing hydro and phone lines through parkades rather than in the ground.

Steele said Montreal has removed its parking meters and businessmen there are satisfied with the results.

"It is a shame to see a 22-foot parking module taken up by a small car or a motorcycle."

With the trend towards smaller cars the problem would get worse.

Townsend to press for 'tricks' report

A man whose name was forged on a letter — an incident which helped bring about the RCMP probe into electoral dirty tricks — said today he will seek legal advice and take personal action in an effort to have the RCMP file on the investigation made public.

Gordon Townsend, an NDP supporter whose name was signed on an anti-NDP letter published by the Colonist during the last provincial election campaign, said the decision of Attorney-General Allan Williams not to release the police report of an investigation is disturbing.

Williams also said there will be no charges as a result of the investigation.

"He (Williams) has given people carte blanche to forge letters," Townsend said.

Williams said the acts were thoroughly reprehensible but that no legal proceedings would follow.

"I'm very upset by his reply," Townsend said.

"Dave Barrett (NDP leader) described it in two words: 'It stinks'.

"I'll be seeing my lawyer Tuesday, after the federal election. I'm wrapped up just now as constituency president in Esquimalt-Saanich.

"But regardless of the outcome of seeing a lawyer, I'll do whatever is within my means to have that report released. Maybe I'll have to picket the buildings.

"It's a matter of principle."

Townsend said if there is nothing in the report to indicate wrongdoing, "why are they not releasing it?"

Barrett is also demanding the report on the dirty tricks investigation be made public immediately.

"If that report is not released there will be cloud hanging over this government that will foul the air of B.C. politics for a long time to come," Barrett said.

Asked if Williams' statement amounted to a whitewash Barrett replied: "To call this a whitewash would denigrate the honorable classic method of whitewashing used by politicians in the past.

"The minister's statement is such a convoluted document that it leads to more questions than it answers.

Turkish violence at flash point

By SAM COHEN
Christian Science Monitor

ISTANBUL - Political violence in Turkey has reached such alarming proportions that it now is seen as a serious threat to the future of the nation's unity and its political system.

Prime Minister Suleyman Demirel said the wave of terror is taking on an "anti-state" character and is aimed at turning Turkey into a Vietnam, Korea or Afghanistan.

Many politicians regard the recent escalation of violence as a move toward civil war. In the words of Sen. Husamettin Cetebi, "the terrorists are staging a rehearsal for a nationwide strife," and now are openly challenging the forces of the state.

Newspaper commentators are stressing that political violence has gone far beyond the limits of terrorist acts and has reached the proportions of guerrilla warfare. The newspaper Hurriyet sees the action as aimed "at the collapse of the democratic regime," while the pro-government Tercuman says the target is "to destroy the structure of the state and national unity."

Amid violence mainly organized or provoked by leftist militant groups, concern also is mounting about intervention by the Turkish armed forces, which are said to be increasingly uneasy about the situation. Some Turks are seriously worried that the military leaders, who early last month issued a warning regarding the deteriorating political and economic conditions in the country, may lose patience in view of recent developments.

The latest flare-up of violence is rioting in the city of Izmir.

Thursday, thousands of Turkish troops, using armored cars, smashed into the state-owned cotton-yarn factory in Izmir and evicted the 1,000 protesting left-wing workers after a gun battle.

One policeman was wounded as police and hundreds of the 10,000 steel-helmeted commandos on the scene, backed by tanks and helicopters, stormed the factory, scene of almost daily violence for the last few weeks.

The workers occupied the Taris cotton-yarn factory to protest widespread dismissals of left-leaning workers following last November's election win by Premier Suleyman Demirel.

The protest reflected opposition to the traditional but controversial system under which employees are purged whenever the party they support becomes the opposition.

The troops, carrying assault rifles, stormed the factory after the workers ignored an ultimatum to come out. As tanks stood by and troops surrounded the plant, armored cars burst through the doors and commandos ran in.

After an exchange of gunfire with workers, some of whom set the cotton bales afire, the workers surrendered and came out with their hands up, witnesses said. Some were taken to a local sports stadium and detained.

Meanwhile, municipal workers in Izmir were on strike in support of the cotton yarn workers, while other businesses stayed

Bennett's will probated

VANCOUVER (CP) — W. A. C. Bennett, former British Columbia premier, left an estate worth an estimated $2.1 million when he died almost a year ago at the age of 79.

All but $10,000 of the estate was left to his wife, May, 82, who lives in the Okanagan community of Kelowna. The family's long-time housekeeper, Winifred Mary Earl, 69, who has been a companion to Mrs. Bennett in recent years, was left $10,000 in trust.

Winnie Earl, as the family calls her, will receive $100 a month until her death at which time the balance returns to the estate of which the sole executor is Bennett's son Russell.

Bennett, premier from 1952 to 1972 when his government was defeated by the NDP, made no provision for his two sons, Russell, 50, and Bill, 48, the present premier, because he considered them to be financially independent.

The son of a New Brunswick logger who became a prosperous hardware merchant and B.C.'s longest-serving premier, left no memorabilia to his adopted province.

His will, signed Dec. 16, 1975, 2½ years after he resigned his Okanagan seat, directed that when his wife dies the estate be divided "into nine separate but equal shares."

Six shares are to be held in trust for the eight granchildren by his two sons and three shares in trust for his daughter Mrs. Anita Tozer and her two children.

None of the son's children will receive any money until the youngest, now nine years old, turns 19.

Mrs. Tozer is to receive the income from the three shares until her youngest child Allan, now 23, turns 30. Mrs. Tozer will then get the capital from one share as will Allan and his brother William, 25.

Mrs. Tozer said she wished her father had left some mementoes to the province. She said there is plenty of material in her mother's basement that she hopes and believes will be given to the provincial archives after the will has been probated.

The inventory of Bennett's assets, filed with the will, shows the bulk was in shares he owned as president of three separate hardware companies — Bennett's stores, Kelowna, Vernon and Penticton.

He owned 64,000 shares valued at $8.80 each ($567,000) in Bennett's (Kelowna) Stores Ltd., 29,500 shares at $13.74 each ($405,330) in the Vernon Store and 34,500 shares at $7.83 each ($270,135) in the Penticton store for a total estimated value of $1,243,965.

The only other shareholder in the chain is Mrs. Bennett, who is vice-president.

Bennett also owned $172,050 worth of Bank of B.C. certificates, $10,500 in B.C. Telephone certificates, $12,500 in Doman Industries Ltd. certificates, about $15,000 in Canada Savings bonds, $5,775 invested in Okanagan Broadcasters Ltd., and $1,650 in Okanagan Holdings Ltd.

Unappraised real estate is given an estimated value of $450,000; cash, money on deposit, life insurance and annuities is listed at $99,591; book debts and promissory notes at $47,115; and miscellaneous items such as household effects and pensions at $86,166.

His estimated total liabilities amounted to $32,918 including a $9,300 bill from the Vancouver investment firm Odlum Brown and T. B. Read Ltd., $4,500 in 1978 income tax and $2,185 to a Kelowna funeral home.

Reds deny waiting for Tito

MOSCOW (UPI) — The official Tass news agency Thursday labeled as ridiculous any concern that the Soviet Union might attempt to pressure Yugoslavia during the leadership vacuum created by President Tito's illness.

The comment was in response to President Carter's statement Wednesday night that the United States would "seriously consider" providing aid to Yugoslavia if asked and if it furthered the interests of the United States.

In Belgrade, Tito clings to life, but official sources say there is virtually no hope that he will survive.

The 87-year-old Communist leader has lapsed into a coma and it now apparently is only a matter of time before he dies, the officials told Western journalists Friday.

revolution which toppled the shah, also said other officials, including immigration officials, were aware of the swap arrangements between the two police forces.

Among other things, the magazine says, a number of Iranian students in Canada suspected of anti-shah activities were deported on technicalties and subsequently taken into custody by SAVAK.

Meanwhile, Iran has lodged a strong protest with UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim over Canada's "grave abuse of diplomatic privileges" in smuggling six U.S. embassy employees out of Tehran last month.

The Canadian action was taken following the seizure of the U.S. embassy in Tehran by Moslem militants Nov. 4. Fifty Americans are still being held hostage by the militants and, despite reports that these hostages may be freed by the end of the week, it was unclear today how close the U.S. and Iran were on resolving the crisis.

U.S. President Carter said today he is growing cautiously optimistic about a settlement, and cancelled a planned weekend trip to remain at the White House as negotiations appeared to have shifted into high gear.

However, Carter said he did not expect the crisis to be resolved before the New Hampshire primary Feb. 26.

Edmund Louis Petitti, a Paris lawyer involved in the hostage negotiations, told the French news agency, Agence France-Presse, that the UN's Waldheim was about to announce the make-up of a commission to investigate charges against the deposed shah.

Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh was quoted today as saying the American hostages would not be released until after the commission finished its work.

On this point Ghotbzadeh appeared to be at odds with Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, who indicated Thursday the hostages could be freed once the commission been established and provided the U.S. met other conditions requested by Iran.

The unfreezing of $6 billion in Iranian gold and dollar deposits in American banks and branches is one of the conditions involved in release of the U.S. hostages, the governor of Iran's central bank said in Tehran Thursday in a telephone interview.

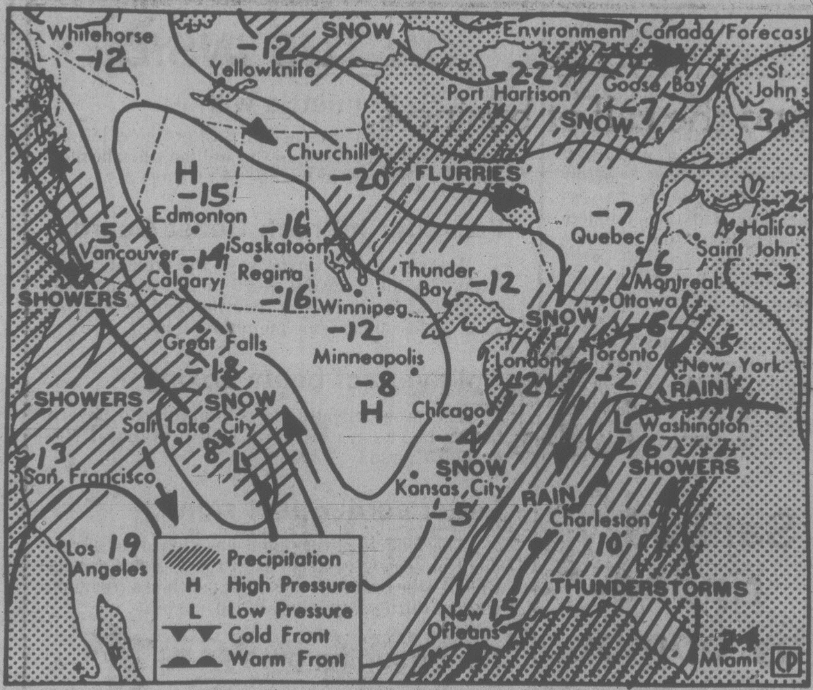

Map valid until midday Saturday

A weak disturbance just off the U.S. coast drifted slowly north Thursday night. As a result the associated cloud spread over the extreme southern portion of the province. Isolated snowflurries were reported in the southern interior and at higher elevations in southwestern B.C. Clear skies and cold temperatures continued across northern and central areas as a high pressure ridge of Arctic origin refused to budge. The disturbance is forecast to die a slow death over the eastern Pacific while the ridge lingers. As a consequence the weather situation should remain relatively static through Saturday.

Reluctant Pierre breaks his chains

TORONTO — You know something's working for Pierre Trudeau when he can't even be slowed by a low-flying bus. The fact that a fragile DC-9 can be put out of commission by a refugee from Greyhound says something about engineering, but we're concerned here about how to foreshorten a campaign.

The solution — a snapshot of the whole election — is to take in three events in 24 hours 2,500 miles apart.

The result due Monday will be a reflection of the styles of two men — Trudeau at a noon meeting in Vancouver, on Wednesday and then an evening speech in Winnipeg; Joe Clark at a major noon speech in Toronto on Thursday.

A reporter leaping from one campaign jet to another in such a short space over such a long distance is struck, like the anthropologists entering King Tut's tomb, by the culture shock.

The Liberals are so cocky they have finally unleashed Reluctant Pierre — or he himself has broken from his chains.

His stem-winder in Vancouver was followed some hours later by an even more impassioned performance in a Winnipeg high school, where they practically had to give him a saliva test afterwards to determine if this was the same zombie who had been dozing for the first seven-and-a-half weeks of the campaign.

As in half a continent away at lunch, Trudeau shucked the snoozing speech and attacked the microphone as if it was a steak sandwich. Shouting — as he had been forbidden to do all campaign by those who've been feeding him cottage cheese and lukewarm gruel — he roared into his verboten territory of national unity and did his old passionate number; without a note, not a red corpuscle untouched.

He even indulged in a bit of his old hobby — press-bashing — with a reference to the alleged failure of the trailing media mob to grasp correctly some of his literary allusions.

So confident are the Liberals that there are some in the troupe, witnessing Trudeau being loosed from his bonds, who think that by Saturday he'll be back to slugging an unemployed bum.

This was Winnipeg, where the women still wear glasses on the top of their hair, and they loved it.

Fourteen hours later, into the warm embrace of the Joe Clark clan in the Royal York here in the city that will decide the election, the smell of defeat is discernible.

Despite public views to the contrary, the ink-stained wretches and radio jockeys are semi-human too, and can't but be infected, by osmosis, by the mood of the political pack at the front end of the plane.

The Clark people know they've lost. No one likes being with a loser and the toll among the press, as usual, is a product of psychic despair as much as physical exhaustion.

Eighteen members of the Clark plane have been struck with the flu. In the desperation of defeat, Clark himself made the risky decision to salvage something by attempting a long flight from Vancouver to Prince Rupert on the weekend when he was fogged out of other destinations.

In Prince Rupert, most everyone still awake on a Saturday night is drunk and the expedition was a disaster, arriving back at its Vancouver hotel at 2 a.m. , both leader and entourage completely drained with a crucial last week still to go.

Clark's exhaustion showed yesterday in what should have been an inspirational address before the prestigious Empire Club. Every double-breasted Tory in Toronto was on hand, filling at least 1,200 chairs and overflowing the Royal York's largest room.

He's a thoroughly decent man and showed it, his tiredness disguising some of his youthful stiffness and making him a much more appealing speaker — a man who privately knows it's over and can reminisce a bit.

He talked about how he's in "a job I like and a country I love", he talked about his daughter and made fun of his own celebrated non-chin.

Most movingly, he told about how he is now applauded for speaking French in Hamilton and on the Prairies and in B.C.

He said there used to be hatred in the country on the language issue but "those forces are now receding."

He took quiet pride — as he is justified in doing — in that.

But within 20 minutes, these faithful Tories were gazing about in inattention. Clark, a surprisingly candid man in private, says matter-of-factly that he is not a man of passion.

He cannot lift a crowd. The pitch in his speech or his voice seldom varies. He does not radiate anything.

He has run a better campaign than the other guy — and he knows it. That merely adds to his sadness and the droop in his voice.

He says, "We're running for office, to stay in office."

Brave words, but futile.

The other night on the Trudeau jet, over a scotch or six, one of the most senior of the Liberal coterie was asked if there was any way the man up front could lose. He thought a while and then said "Only if he tells someone to bleep off." He didn't say bleep.

Horse slaughtering plot bared

NEW WESTMINSTER (CP) — Ed McKitka, former mayor of Surrey, threatened to shoot horses in the parking lot of an alderman's meat store if the alderman did not change his mind about a proposed race track, British Columbia Supreme Court was told Thursday.

The horse-shooting plot was revealed in telephone conversations with racetrack supporters that were wiretapped by the RCMP.

In the conversations, McKitka proposed grouping 200 horses in Bill Miller's parking lot, then shooting them one by one every five minutes until Miller agreed not to oppose a zoning application by Meadow Creek Farms, which wanted to hold quarter horse racing in Surrey.

McKitka, mayor of the Vancouver-area municipality from 1975 to 1977, faces nine charges, including committing a breach of trust, demanding a benefit and using threats and deceit to attempt to influence an alderman. He has pleaded not guilty.

Court was also told McKitka threatened to call down bylaw inspectors on Miller's meat store unless the alderman agreed to favor development of Meadow Creek.

Miller said he was not bothered by the idea of 200 horses parading in front of his store but took the warning seriously. He said he did not feel personally threatened and did not change his mind about the race track.

He told the court he believed McKitka had the power to use municipal officials for such purposes as the bylaw inspections the mayor was suggesting .

He also said it was common for Surrey mayors to use their authority under the Municipal Act to delay or speed up development projects.

Other wiretap evidence showed that McKitka sought and accepted campaign funds in 1977 from land developer Joe Beck, who was managing a commercial-townhouse project for developers Walter Link and Steven McGuire.

The evidence, secretly recorded at Surrey Municipal Hall Aug. 19, 1977, showed Beck went to McKitka for help in getting the project approved by Surrey council.

RCMP raid CBC

VANCOUVER (CP) — RCMP took three tape recordings and three cassettes during a raid on the CBC radio newsroom Thursday.

CBC officials said the tapes belonged to reporter Paul Griffin and consisted of conversations between the environmental group Greenpeace and a United States caribou hunter in the Spatsizi Wilderness Park in northwestern B.C. last Oct. 4.

The police warrant said the tapes were relevant to an investigation into an assault complaint made by the hunter, Gary Michael Zechel, of Dearborn, Mich.

Len Lauk, CBC regional manager for B.C., said the raid was a heavy-handed way to gather evidence and that a subpoena for Griffin to testify in court or a simple request for information would have done the trick.

Greenpeace members have said they were in the park to disrupt trophy hunting. Griffin's broadcast described how they blocked a narrow trail, preventing Zechel, his wife and a hunting guide from going into the park on horseback.

Uranium threat to water

VANCOUVER (CP) — Uranium concentrations in the Okanagan could be washed into public water systems, the royal commission on uranium mining has been told.

A paper prepared by consulting engineer R. R. Culbert, a partner in the Vancouver firm of D. G. Leighton and Associates Ltd., was presented Wednesday at technical hearings of the commission.

The company has identified 46 concentrations of uranium in southcentral B.C. and Culbert gave details of them in his paper.

These concentrations are of post-glacial uranium, which means they were deposited only in the last few thousand years and contain infinitesimal amounts of the radioactive substance present in older uranium ore. The uranium is loosely held in soil up to seven metres deep.

Culbert said he is not qualified to speak on public health problems associated with uranium but wished to bring to the commission's attention the potential instability of some deposits which are not located in completely enclosed basins.

He said it appears the great majority of such accumulations could be mobilized and flushed out rapidly by even a very moderate change in groundwater acidity "such as might be expected with changes in land use."

Culbert quoted from a letter written by Dr. Roman Pyrih of the Colorado School of Mines Research Institute, who examined the chemistry of samples from four deposits in the Okanagan.

Pyrih wrote that his institute's study "clearly suggests that the uranium accumulating in peat deposits is of environmental concern."

Refugee argues ambiguous letter

VANCOUVER (CP) — Polish seaman Tadeusz Jakubowski was not properly informed he did not qualify as a refugee in Canada, a hearing in the federal court of appeal was told Thursday.

Jakubowski is attempting to set aside immigration department proceedings against him. If his final appeal fails, he must leave Canada voluntarily by midnight, Feb. 28 or face deportation and possible imprisonment in his native land where he says he is in trouble with the communist regime.

Jakubowski, 40, has been seeking refugee status in Canada for two years.

His lawyer Don Rosenbloom argued Thursday that Jakubowski was not properly notified, in a letter addressed to him, of the immigration minister's decision that he was not a refugee as defined under the Immigration Act.

A decision to allow or reject the lawyer's arguments is expected today.

Rosenbloom also argued that the normal routine of applying for refugee status was not being followed.

Gov't backtracks on roe pooling

PRINCE RUPERT (CP) — The federal fisheries department has backtracked on a threat not to allow openings in this year's roe herring fishery if a licence-pooling arrangement for seine boats could not be agreed to by licence holders.

Bob Humphries, regional herring co-ordinator, said earlier there was a possibility there would be no openings without an agreement on licence pooling but at a public meeting Thursday night fisheries official Wayne Shinners said a fishery would still take place without an agreement but it would be tightly supervised.

Shinners, director of field services for the department, made the statement after announcing the results of a questionnaire sent to all 249 seine licence holders asking them to either accept or reject the boat-pooling plan agreed to by the fisheries department and the Vessel Owners Association.

Shinners said that out of 170 replies, 145 favored the plan and 25 were against it.

Tourist facility halted

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm blocked a proposed tourist facilities development at Spotted Lake near Penticton Thursday after meeting with a delegation of Indians from the area.

The Regional District of Okanagan-Similkameen had planned to rezone a piece of property adjacent to the lake for commercial purposes so that the facilities could be built.

Vander Zalm said he made his decision in the interest of the province and the Indian community which believes the lake has medicinal values.

Still too cheap

It's being called the 18-cent election. If for a moment anyone thought an extra 18 cents for a gallon of gasoline would solve the country's energy problem, then we should be glad to get off so cheap.

The fact is 18 cents is a pittance of the true cost for energy security.

The major reason for supporting artifically low oil prices is to suppress inflation in the short-term, a motive hard to dispute. But there are so many other factors in favor of higher oil costs that probable higher inflation should be endured until the country is back on a secure footing.

Canada has a choice of keeping government-subsidized prices, escalating the price towards world levels or basing the price on its replacement cost.

Petroleum products at the moment are grossly undervalued because no account is made of the price paid on 25 per cent of our oil consumption. The country is importing about 450,000 barrels a day at double the domestic price.

If the price were allowed to rise, with appropriate profit sharing between government and industry, a number of things would happen, not the least of which would be higher inflation rates.

Paying the real cost of energy would, despite what skeptics say, encourage the conservation of petroleum products as consumers tried to get the best value for their dollars. But more important, alternate energy sources which are abundant in Canada would be closer to becoming economically feasible.

Forest and garbage waste, sunshine, wind, coal, tides, all of which require technology too expensive at today's energy prices, would become more viable. Some sources would even be renewable. The technology for these sources must be in place before the cheap sources begin to dry up. Its development will create new industry and job opportunities.

The best estimate at the moment, is that by 1990 the flow of oil from Alberta will be only half of what it is today. Higher prices and government incentives would encourage further exploration in all parts of Canada.

Ottawa's oil subsidy will nudge $2 billion dollars this year. It's money being added to a mounting deficit. Higher prices, managed properly, would offset this burden that some credit as a major source of inflation.

This is not an 18-cent election. It's far more, both in terms of dollars and the future of Canada. An obsession with the inflationary effects of higher energy prices will do Canadians more harm in the long run than inflation itself in the short-term.

Tide turns

The position of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union on prices for this year's roe-herring catch probably even startles some fishermen.

Granted, B.C.'s spring roe-herring harvest has proved exceptional. In three short years the catch value has skyrocketed thirtyfold. From only a few hundred dollars per ton paid in 1977, gillnet fishermen received anywhere from $3,500 to $5,000 a ton last year.

However, it appears that the Japanese appetite for the delicacy has been somewhat curbed by shelf prices that have been escalating in the same proportion. As a result, much of the 1979 catch remains unsold and a couple of Japanese trading companies are reported on the verge of bankruptcy.

Last year the UFAWU negotiated a price of $1,200 a ton for gillnetters and $700 for seiners. But those prices had no bearing on prices paid to fishermen.

The fishermen are not obliged to sell their herring at the negotiated price, although they would not sell for anything less. If competition between fish buyers on the grounds force the price above the negotiated level, fishermen take the higher price.

Last year fish buyers and processors bid the price to spectacular levels and the people with the widest smiles were the fishermen.

Negotiations for the 1980 minimum price have started. This year the UFAWU is asking for $3,500 a ton for gillnetters and $2,100 for seiners, close to a 300 per cent increase over the 1979. If last year's market conditions were repeated this year, those negotiated prices again would be meaningless figures. The bidding war would resume and who knows how high the catch price might go.

However, as Japanese consumers balk at roe herring prices reaching $60 a pound, there is speculation that herring prices will be drastically reduced because there will not be the same demand. But the union appears unwilling to leave anything to chance. It wants a guarantee close to last year's record price regardless of market conditions.

It is interesting that when favorable winds are blowing over the fishing grounds the union and its members have no qualms about playing auctioneer to a gallery of flush fish buyers. But when the tide appears to be turning, it is amazing that nobody wants to risk being an entrepreneur.

RICHARD GWYN

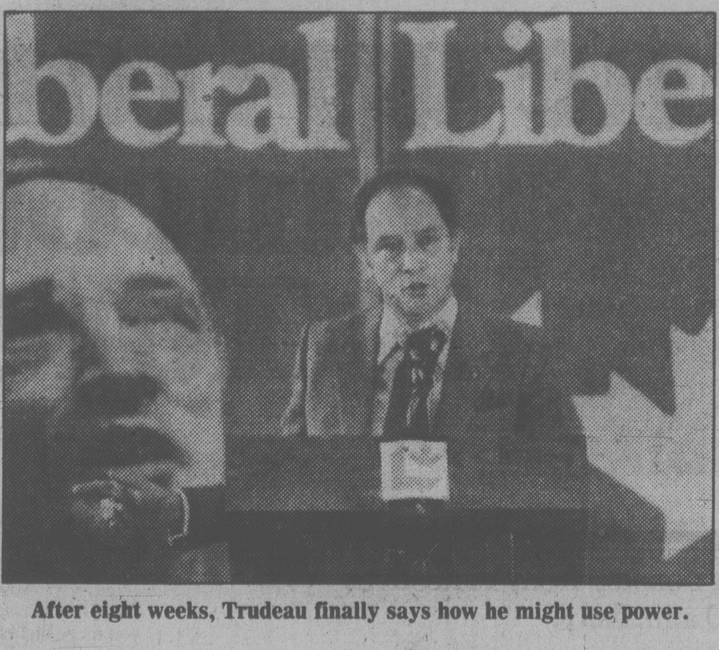
One lonely Liberal objective

Except for a lunatic fringe of editorial writers and academics, few will quarrel with Pierre Trudeau's dictum that during elections a leader should offer "objectives, guiding principles", rather than an elaborate platform dressed up with detailed promises.

Promises, as often as not, either shouldn't have been made in the first place — here a railway to be double-tracked, there an embassy to be moved — or, are overtaken by events.

As for platforms, most add up to "just words", as California Governor Jerry Brown once said.

Objectives and guiding principles are different. They inform voters about the way a leader intends to go, without mapping out every twist and turn he expects to make.



After eight weeks, Trudeau finally says how he might use power.

Hazy distinction

This is a useful distinction which Trudeau so far in this campaign either has blurred or ignored. Early on, he announced five policy "themes", each so vague — "energy security at fair prices", for example — that he could have compressed the five into the one unvarying Liberal theme of "power at any price".

Now, at the very last, Trudeau has put his preachings into practice.

After eight weeks of telling us nothing, except how Joe Clark has misused power, Trudeau has told us how he himself might use power if he regains it.

In a speech Tuesday to the Toronto Ad and Sales Club, Trudeau set out two objectives: "To expand Canadian ownership and control the economy" and "to build a competitive industrial sector". Alongside these he laid down two guiding principles: "the federal government as an active participant (in the economy) and "new instruments" (such as "revitalized" Canada Development Corp., an expanded Foreign Investment Review Agency and a possible state trading corporation).

Together, these add up to a lean to the left and a nudge toward nationalism.

To believe in Trudeau as a born-again economic nationalist isn't easy. In the 1974 election he promised 50 per cent Canadian ownership of the oil and gas industry by 1980 and repeated it in this election with the target date delayed to 1990. But except at moments of convenience like these, Trudeau in all his years of power and all his writings opposed such doctrines.'

To pick apart some of the details of Trudeau's policy paper is even easier. New Democrat leader Ed Broadbent began the demolition process the same day when he said: "Where does Trudeau think he's been these past 11 years?" Broadbent pointed out that under Trudeau 90 per cent of foreign takeover applications were approved by FIRA.

But, suspend your disbelief for a moment, and refresh your memory about a couple of the elementary rules of politics.

Rule One: The only time a politician says something important during an election is when he says something he doesn't need to say. Trudeau's speech survives that test. With less than a week to go, the Liberals now take victory for granted. A last-minute appeal to economic nationalism might move a few New Democrat votes and mobilize a few Liberal ones, but not enough of either to matter for their own sake at this late stage. You have to allow him some purpose other than electoral advantage.

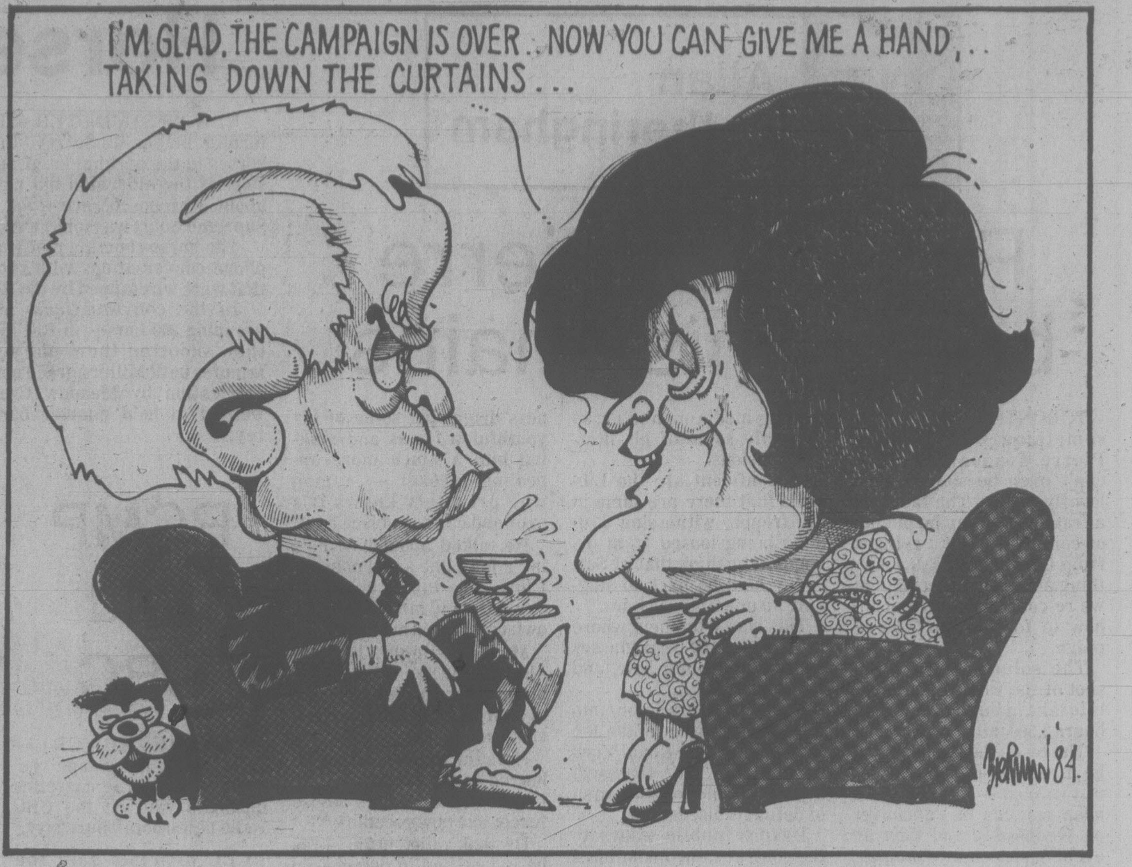
Rule Two: In politics, what matters is people, rather than platforms or policies or programs.

As interesting as anything Trudeau said was the person who helped him decide what to say: Herb Gray, Windsor MP, ex-minister, and the Liberal's last card-carrying economic nationalist. Mark down Gray in a future Liberal cabinet as minister of trade and commerce. He'd have charge of FIRA, the Canada Development Corp., and indeed just about everything Trudeau talked about.

No manifesto

After listening to Trudeau say nothing for eight weeks, it's tempting to over react when he says something at last. Certainly vague references to "an all-Canadian tar sands plant" and a "broadened" mandate for FIRA (to bankroll Canadian firms' bids against foreign takeover applications) are not a manifesto of economic nationalism.

Still, Trudeau didn't need to say what he said. After he'd said it, Gray walked around wearing the broadest smile he's managed since he was dropped from the Cabinet in 1974. It wasn't much, but it was something — the first hint of an objective, the first outline of a guiding principle by which Trudeau actually may use power if he regains it.



I'M GLAD, THE CAMPAIGN IS OVER.. NOW YOU CAN GIVE ME A HAND,.. TAKING DOWN THE CURTAINS...

Whose trust?

In response to the letter, "Foolish Statement", in the Times of Feb. 5:

The writer complains that the New Democratic Party candidate Robin Blencoe has betrayed the trust of those who elected him to municipal office by moving into the federal arena.

It is worth noting perhaps that in 1972 Allan McKinnon left a position in municipal government, chairman of the Greater Victoria School Board, to run for federal office.

Would the letter writer suggest that Mr. McKinnon also betrayed a public trust when he first ran for federal office? — Dianne Grimmer, 1936 Quamichan Street.

Don't rush away

I recently returned home from playing approximately my 400th concert with the Victoria Symphony Orchestra. Out of these 400, I would guess that 230 of those have been at the Royal Theatre. The audiences have varied from large to small, enthusiastic to indifferent, but one thing has remained depressingly constant throughout the years — the ignorant behavior of the people who bolt out the door during the applause at the end of a concert.

Are they the very elderly or the handicapped who need to beat the rush in order not to be jostled in the crowd? No, these early exiters scurry out far too fast to be anything but able-bodied. Are they people without vehicles who must hurry to catch a bus? It seems highly unlikely, as no two concerts finish at exactly the same time. The quick exits are the same whether the program is short or long.

A recent concert was the occasion of our first visit from the popular English "Pops" conductor, Stanley Black. He brought with him a sizzling arrary of Latin America tunes, richly orchestrated. The pace was good, the orchestra was "hot" and the audience extremely receptive. Yet, at the conclusion of the final selection, before Mr. Black even turned to acknowledge the applause, the early scramblers rushed out the door. However, they was an encore, and these people flocked back though the doors to hear what they were missing. The ushers obligingly allowed them the privilege of standing there, inside the doors.

I have two suggestions, one for the Royal Theatre ushers, and one for the patrons who want to "listen and dash". Ushers, if there are people who change their minds about leaving quickly and decide to stay for the encore, please insist that they return to their seats (hopefully, they would suffer a little humiliation from the people around who would glare at them) or, insist that they wait outside the door.

And now a suggestion for the quick-footed patrons. Please leave before the last selection has begun. That way, your exit will not be thought of as an insult by the orchestra members who stare at your retreating backs. To leave during the applause is nothing less than an insult to the musicians.

I know that my sentiments are shared by other orchestra members. Perhaps if the day ever comes when the audience remains in their seats (or on their feet) until the applause dies, the orchestra will give the audience a standing ovation. — H. Hawkes-Frost, P.O. Box 2524, Sidney.

Five is optimal

Research at an American university has found that an executive council functions best when it has five members. They also found that the greatest number of people whom the average person can recognize is one thousand.

The few peoples who are still free, that is, who have not been subjected to power, native or foreign, always live in groups of about 25 regardless of economic conditions. This group probably consists of five men, five women and 15 juveniles. Their tribes have about 500 members.

As males and females have separate hierarchies (any farmer knows that) each consists of five members so modern research and primordial experience agree that five is optimal. Considering the difference in transportation and communications existing between themselves and Americans it seems likely that 500 is the largest number of people they can recognize. Thus in modern society the optimal number for the small, basic, intimate group is 10 adults and for the whole of a persons' associates about one thousand.

Why do not these biologically natural numbers prevail in modern society?

Ten thousand years or more ago little tyrants arose. Power being insatiable as well as corrupting they soon became great tyrants. Did they own their power to people's belief that they had influence with some god? It seems probable. With the help of developing science and technology they built what Lewis Mumford calls the first Megamachine, making everyone a slave. Probably the most outstanding products of the first Megamachine were the Egyptian pyramids. We live under the second Megamachine. Probably its most outstanding product is the H bomb.

It seems we are about to be subjected to another all-out world-wide war. That is not because "our" Megamachine is good and "theirs" bad or vice versa. It is because Man, being denied his natural freedom these thousands of years has developed unnaturally — has become a monster. The eminent psychiatrist, Erich Fromm, tells us that in our society a psychologically healthy person is a rarity. It is well known that imprisonment is psychologically ruinous. We are "stir-crazy".

We have learned from the Megamachine (System, Establishment or whatever) to treat one another as it treats us, that is, as things — as means to an end — the end of the Magamachine's greatest power.

Czar or commissar, all power is man's enemy.

Survival and growth can come only from goodwill and co-operation. — Neil Matheson, 4—303 Vancouver Street.

Trace relatives

I am writing on behalf of a lady seeking descendants of a relative who settled in the Nanaimo area in the 19th century.

The Rollo family of Kirkaldy, Scotland, are trying to establish contact with relatives in Canada. Specifically, they are trying to trace James or William Rollo, or their children. James and William were sons of John Rollo, who came from Kirkaldy around 1850 and settled in Nanaimo and Gabriola Island.

Anyone having information is requested to contact: Mrs. Pearson, Suite 305, 154 East 18th Avenue, North Vancouver, B.C. V5V 1E3. — Allan G. Stables, Victoria.

Ads refused

Thirty radio stations across the country have broadcasted our ads sponsored by the pro-life group called the "Babies Ransom Fund". These radio stations who broadcast our ads do not necessarily agree or disagree with our position; however, they believe in free speech and democracy — especially at election time.

However, our freedom of speech has been denied by certain pro-NDP or pro-abortion radio stations which have refused to broadcast any of our ads. Those stations would not allow us to air our views, and say they don't want to get involved, or our ads are in "bad taste", or say "they are unacceptable or offensive to some members of their listening audience." When questioned they refused to tell us what part is in "bad taste or offensive", or why they are unacceptable. These stations accept communist propaganda as in good taste whereas they consider our outspoken Christian propaganda in bad taste. Obviously, they do not want to give us the freedom to express our political view of what should be socially acceptable human behaviour in relation to the government's duty and responsibility to protect the family and the weaker members of society from selfish, immoral conduct and exploitation. — L. J. Matte, Director, Babies Ransom Fund, Prince George.

Thanks to lodge

A few days ago, Beacon Hill Lodges of Canada (James Bay Lodge) held an appreciation dinner for relatives and friends of residents. The invitation was also extended to persons who have given community service to James Bay Lodge residents.

As one who has a relative in this institution, may I publicly acknowledge and thank the administrative staff for their creditable and praiseworthy efforts in organizing this social gathering.

It provided an evening of enjoyment to those not as fortunate as ourselves. I am told the attendance was over 400, including residents.

Too often we hear public criticism of such institutions but fail to recognize the many good works performed by the staff of such places. We should realize it takes a considerable amount of love, time and patience in dealing with some of these residents.

To my wife and me, it was a very rewarding experience. It brought much sunshine to many of these people who otherwise lead a very quiet life. A hearty thank you to James Bay Lodge. — Arthur J. R. Ash, 107-1875 Lansdowne Road.

Central control

Once again it appears that Westerners can stay home on election day. The people of central Canada shall elect another Liberal oligarchy and we shall be expected to clam-up for another four or five years. How many more times will the people of Western Canada, held in contempt as so many hicks, be ruled by eastern politicians from Montreal and Quebec City. We have as much pride in ourselves as any Quebecois. It is time we stood up and said, "no more!"

If Western politicians are unworthy of the highest office in the land, then it may be time for us to sit down and seriously contemplate Western independence. Many a nation has been born out of such frustration. Westerners have been patient long enough. — K. A. Jones, 5145 Cordova Bay Road.

Walking wounded

I am concerned about the planned closure of the Youth Services and other centralized services of the Human Resources Ministry. These resources were created for our needy youth (ones who act out a great deal and who often are now on the downtown streets).

These youth were referred to Youth Services when a social worker could no longer cope with them in the regular system and district. Such a closure will leave the walking wounded, who suffer emotionally, to suffer degradation needlessly. As a public health nurse for over 15 years, I saw many young folk bereft of such help left to go down the drain for lack of staff and resources. Such is a blight to our society.

Also, these persons not having had the help required to bring healing and to develop healthy ways of coping become a much greater financial burden to society as the years go by. — Marion O. Handcock, 5—4058 Comers Place.

Pierre scorning showbiz laws . . .

By WILLIAM JOHNSON

'I can do it, but it's not what I'm paid for'

QUEBEC — What a change in style! Is there a change in substance? Le style, c'est l'homme, but is it also the politician?

Pierre Trudeau campaigned in Quebec City this week, and it was my first opportunity to observe his current manifestation. From election to election, he changes. This election he reads his text — he must know by heart by now all those phrases that he repeats, identical, in English or in French, in Quebec or in Nova Scotia.

Denise Bombardier, the very competent Radio-Canada interviewer, had at him Monday but barely managed to edge him away a few times from his stock campaign speech. You could see the old pro politician at work. He spoke continuously, leaving Madame Bombardier few sound gaps to break in. Even when she did, he sometimes ignored her and talked on. He controlled most of the interview, kept it away from the reflective, spontaneous, personal terrain where he seemed so comfortable in 1968 talking to Patrick Watson. Most of the interview was the same campaign speech by other means.

Toward the end, though, Madame Bombardier did ask Trudeau why he now reads his speeches. In that exchange at last there was a spark of life.

"I wanted people to discuss energy rather than personalities," Trudeau said. "This time I obliged the media to cover my campaign, not the campaign they would have wanted to cover."

He referred to the 1979 campaign when he spent a lot of time talking about energy, but the media only picked on his exchanges with hecklers and turned his campaign into personal piques.

"It made a good show, and you journalists like that. You spend a good part of your time personalizing power. To give a good show, I'm able to do it, but it's not what I'm paid for."

Certainly the old pro politician has learned, this election, to insulate himself from the predilection of the mass media for color. Color is what you need when there is no news. An election campaign is, almost by definition, a non-news event. It's a series of speeches. In normal times speeches are about the least newsworthy exercise one can imagine. It's only if some new policy is announced that a speech can generate news. For election campaigns, though, the bureaucracies of the news media define "campaign coverage" as a kind of privileged news operation. They assign their best reporters to accompany the leaders. The reporters spend all day, day after day, witnessing the same people trying to disguise the fact they're giving the same non-newsworthy speeches.

In the absence of news, reporters need color pieces. That is, they look for the eye-catchintg anecdote, the dazzling bit of trivia, the drama, the scene, which will allow them creditably to fill a few paragraphs of print or a few minutes of broadcast time.

The affinity between news media and color in a non-news situation produces the distortions which come out in every election campaign. A color piece is a tiny play with a simple plot. If Joe Clark has been established as prone to trivial bungles, then every instance of a trivial bungle becomes a fit subject for a color piece. But a trivial bungle by Pierre Trudeau will not be suitable material because, in the simple scenarios of the trade, Trudeau has not been established as the character who bungles. He is the arrogant one: vignettes which show his arrogance will be sure-fire color pieces. What if Clark should have a little burst of arrogance of his own? The rules of showbiz would not make that a fit subject for a color piece. Wrong characterization.

The point is not to impugn the intentions or the competence of the people in the news media. It is to bring out that news media are mixed media, partly dealing with information, partly dispensing entertainment. When there is no new information to dispense, the entertainment function takes over totally, with its own laws, the laws of showbiz.

The public thinks the press sets out to make or break someone. Not so. The laws of showbiz, subtle, unformulated, have a life of their own. They largely dictate the scenarios into which the politicians are written, real characters caught in a largely fictitious play.

Trudeau, this election, is trying to keep the laws of showbiz from working against him. Recognizing that speeches are non-news events, but that color pieces are more dangerous to him than news reporting, he is trying to give no opportunity for color. If he serves only the same old speech and nothing else, he will be challenging the laws of showbiz, forcing the press to try and pretend that a tired old speech has a breath of news. Better repetitious rhetoric than the germ of a plot for a color piece.

It makes for poor entertainment, poor news value, but good politics when you're ahead.

By DOUGLAS FISHER

OTTAWA — Bruce Phillips of CTV explained why the previously annouced guest, Pierre Trudeau, would not be on the TV show Question Period the other day. There had not been an "undertaking" or a "promise" of the Liberal leader's presence. It was more of an "understanding!" A few days before the program's taping the CTV invitation was rejected by Trudeau's key adviser, Jim Coutts. Phillips gathered from Coutts that there was no reason to risk his leader being chewed up by reporters before a national audience at this stage of the campaign. The campaign was going well; the end was in sight, a successful end; why take chances?

It does no one any good to get angry about the campaigning methods of any of our leaders. In three campaigns since the near debacle in 1972, the Liberal schemers have cocooned their leader carefully and controlled his appearances and their content. Neither in program terms nor in the debating of issues has the Liberal leader been clear and open this campaign, even though he's without the burden of governing. Voters can judge this as they will.

The current interpretation — a rather cynical one — is that the Liberals have known by opinion polling that they had a comfortable lead from Day One of the campaign; therefore, the strategy has been not to risk it. And the risk is variously given as a damning burst of temper, an indiscreet opinion or a flare of the old arrogance.

I'm beginning to wonder if more than this kind of risk is being avoided. I wonder if Coutts-Davey, etc. aren't worried about showing Trudeau as he really is, a kind of "burned out case". It's the mind — the temper, the flexibility, the elan of it — that one wonders about.

Evidence? You want evidence? There is only a bit on which to base some supposition.

In the past two years, some would say since his domestic scene sundered, Trudeau has seemed curiously detached and most uneven. His government in its last months called forth images of hardening of the arteries — dour, unresponsive, almost totally lacking in zest. Never a high, steady performer in the House, Trudeau became more indifferent to the institution. Remember, he let Parliament run on well past the normal four years, then he fought the election vaguely on national unity, an issue not particularly popular in his party in English Canada. Aside from a few minutes of high aggressiveness in the famous televised leaders' debate, his campaign course was plodding. No verve!

After the campaign he behaved like a zombie for many months.

When the new House opened, his performances were indifferent, his appearances rare. Discontent among his own caucus, notably among those from English Canada, was substantial. It climaxed oddly in the sudden relaxation of tension in the caucus with his resignation announcement.

Then, just as the party was shaping for the process of replacing him, the House was brought down. A major body of opinion among Liberal MPs from English Canada finally decided that if they had to go with Trudeau he must put himself in touch with the caucus for main campaign themes (no national unity stuff!) and present a team approach. Most of them I've talked with feel they have a near iron-clad understanding of a retirement within two years of an election win.

As one senior MP told me: "We know he's been getting crankier, that he readily drifts out of touch with us." The same man has little time for Coutts — "he doesn't tell the truth" — and he thinks the fire, though not the temper, has gone out of his leader. "He's aged a lot. His family situation is a preoccupation. He not only doesn't want to stay around for a long run, his intellect tells him he isn't up to it."

STRAY FEATHERS

Harold Hosford

If you've got any ideas about putting up a nesting box for birds this summer, now's the time to get at the job.

In less than a month the first spring migrants will be showing up, and among those early-birds will be the Violet-green Swallows — probably the most likely candidate for occupants of your birdhouse. Not far behind them will be Tree swallows — almost as good a bet. As a matter of fact, if I was building a box now, I'd build for one of these.

If the significance of the words "build for" slipped past you, let me explain: one does not just build a bird-box, one builds a box for birds — a specific type of box for a specific kind of bird. And if there's one reason more than any other why bird boxes go unoccupied it's because those boxes weren't built with the birds in mind.

The most frequent mistake when making a nesting box is making the hole too small. Many of us seem to have a distorted idea of how big a bird is — at least the bird we're hoping to have use our nest box. The next most frequent mistake we make is location — where we put the nest-box.

Let's take a look at these mistakes in a little more detail. First, the hole. The subject of the size of the hole leads right into the greater subject of the dimensions of the box, and — surprisingly — the dimensions of the bird's home are just as important to it as the dimensions of our homes are to us. For example, the recommended size for a nest-box for either Violet-green of Tree Swallows is that it should have a floor about five inches square, should be about six inches deep, have a hole between one and five inches above the floor and, most importantly, that hole should be about an inch-and-a-half in diameter.

I emphasize the size of the hole because, if it is properly made, it could help keep such unwanted characters as Starlings and House Sparrows out of the box. As for the other dimensions, experience has shown that they represent the size of a box most frequently used by these two kinds of swallows.

But, back to that hole again — particularly to the problem of keeping out the unwanted. There is a theory that if you make the hole oval — an inch high by an inch-and-a-half wide — you won't have any trouble with Starlings and House Sparrows. I think the theory is based on the wide-shouldered, small-headed build of the swallows. Whether it works or not, I've never been able to prove.

As for the roof of your birdhouse, make it hinged so that you can clean out the box at the end of the season — or maybe take a peek now and then just to see how the occupants are doing. Also, slope the roof to the front and let it over-hang the hole by an inch or two.

Which brings me to location; Violet-green and Tree Swallows seem to prefer a southern exposure. They also like lots of open space around the box, space in which they can do their aerial displays and sweep to and from the box with ease.

Trees are never good places for bird houses unless you can devise some way of keeping cats out of them. Trees are generally not good for swallows for another reason — their branches usually interfere with that flying freedom the swallows so love.

A good spot for a swallow box is high under the eaves of your house. Put your bird box between 10 and 15 feet up, and far enough back under the eaves that a marauding cat can't get at it, and the swallows will do the rest.

If you have a mind to build for something other than swallows, you've got lots to choose from. There are nearly 30 kinds of birds that can be induced to live in bird boxes. You can find out all about them, and their building codes, from a useful little book put out by the Provincial Museum and available in the museum gift shop. The book is called "Attracting and Feeding Birds in British Columbia" and, at a dollar a copy, it's a bargain.

Letters to the editor

Mix fruit

The Capital Regional District and the Urban Transit Authority seem to be stuck with one thought: Tax the people for transportation.

When the transportation was in private hands it was made to pay its own way and their best payment came from the charter trips.

Here is a different tactic. The B.C. government in its wisdom sold the charter trips to a U.S. company. Now the UTA or Regional Board should show some leadership and approach the B.C. government with these terms: The U.S. company take over the bus system as well; The UTA take over the charter trips and place a surcharge or tax on the customers of the charter trips.

Failing that, the UTA should tell the B.C. government to fly a kite, and then the UTA should dissolve itself.

To put it bluntly, it is a case of putting all the lemons (buses) and the oranges (charter trips) in the same basket. — Fred. H. Boulter, 808 Brock Avenue.

No discrimination

In response to the Jan. 22 letter in which Mr. Napier charges the Insurance Corporation of B.C. with discrimination, it should be noted that the corporation's new FAIR program has removed the factors of sex and marital status from the auto insurance rating system and will continue to eliminate other discriminatory elements over the next four years.

The charge that ICBC discriminates against women is without foundation.

The basic rate increases quoted by Mr. Napier are correct, but would be the same for a man or a woman. Retired persons over 65 do receive special consideration and pay lower premiums.

While there is a basic rate increase of 10 per cent this year, individual premiums may increase or decrease because of different factors. These could include the assessment of the vehicle model at current market prices, the expanded discount eligibility requirements, and adjustments to territorial rates. — C. B. Penhall, Manager, Public Information, Insurance Corporation of B.C.

Langwood

In reference to the closure of Langwood Workshop: would Grace McCarthy be so indifferent (seemingly) if someone near and dear to her were so afflicted?

I ask her to stop the closure of the Langwood Workshop which has given so much pleasure to the few attending it each day and also relieves the strain and anxiety of their parents, if only for a few hours a day. — Jean M. McDonald, 629 Kildew Road.

Very serious

Re: the article by Judy Steed in the Jan. 19 edition of Canadian Weekend and her statement . . . "a nursery school teacher (we all know that's not a serious career)." All we can very seriously say is: Shame on you! — The Vancouver Island Cooperaive Preschool Association Supervisors' Committee, c/o 752 Victoria Avenue.

Who needs it?

"Tear jerking journalism" is not needed to produce, "a silent majority so vengeful they probably want the lash reintroduced", as stated by the president of the Alberta Police Association (Feb.7).

All it needs is the harsh reality of three thugs, "putting the boots" to a gentle brother-in-law on a downtown Victoria street about 8:30 p.m. one quiet evening.

All it needs is to see that gentle man lying in a hospital bed with a gashed forehead, broken nose, broken cheek bones, a damaged lower jaw, three broken ribs and the chance of vision impairment in one eye.

All it needs is the knowledge that surgeons worked for 3½ hours to repair the damage, with perhaps the cancellation of someone else's long awaited elective surgical appointment.

All it needs is the knowledge that those muggers, if apprehended, charged and convicted, would suffer not one iota of physical pain or remorse, instead they would be warmly housed, nutritiously fed and later on might even be granted weekend passes to pursue their pleasures.

Revengeful — yes indeed, and you too might feel the same way if someone near and dear to your joins the growing list of victims of a bestial, brutal crime that is becoming so commonplace in Victoria that it is no longer newsworthy. In one week my brother-in-law, a taxi driver and a gentleman taking a mid-morning stroll in Beacon Hill Park were all mugged.

Who needs, "tear jerking journalism?" — Ruby A. Pearon, 2085 Avondale Road.

Tanker study may kill ban

SEATTLE (AP) — The Coast Guard is proposing another study of supertankers in Puget Sound, one that could jeopardize an existing ban on tankers larger than 125,000 tons, officials say.

Last April, the Coast Guard proposed a permanent ban on tankers larger than 125,000 tons east of Port Angeles. Adoption of final rules was expected in late 1979.

Cmdr. Jack Patterson, who heads the rule-making procedure, said Thursday the Coast Guard likely will decide in the next few weeks to begin a new study of the relationship between tanker size and the risk of oil spills in Puget Sound.

Patterson said the study likely will take nine months.

An interim ban imposed in 1978 restricted tankers larger than 125,000 tons from entering the inland waters of Western Washington. Brock Adams, then-secretary of transportation, said the rule should remain in effect until the Coast Guard establishes permanent regulations.

Patterson said the Coast Guard originally intended to adopt the 125,000-ton limit 90 days after the period for public comment ended last summer. But he said serious questions have been raised about the earlier Coast Guard study and another study appears to be a good idea.

Prank backfires

DUNCAN — Police here Thursday were still trying to find out where a 17-year-old obtained a disarmed hand grenade with which he frightened restaurant patrons earlier this week.

The incident, which police described as a bragging prank, occurred during the supper hour at Bob's Grill when the unnamed youth sat down with a group of friends. There were about 10 patrons in the restaurant.

The youth was arrested after he left the restaurant. No charges have been laid but a police spokesman said a charge of public mischief is contemplated.

Messy rooftop scene of Thursday's spectacular fire

$350,000 damage from Camosun fire

Thursday's spectacular fire in a new building on Camosun College's Lansdowne campus caused an estimated $350,000 damage, Saanich fire officials said today.

Deputy chief Orval McGregor said the fire, although confined to the roof, caused extensive damage to electrical, plumbing and ventilation equipment as well as to drywall supplies.

The tar and gravel roof, which had just been poured by Universal Sheet Metal at a cost of $78,000, was destroyed.

Peter Rinfret, project manager for the $6 million multi-purpose building, said there was considerable smoke damage to the top floor.

There are indications, too, that the west wall of the building may have to be replaced, he said.

The fire started shortly after 12 p.m. when a tar kettle boiled over and set fire to tar on the roof.

Four workmen tried to extinguish the blaze but were forced back by the intense heat. When propane tanks fuelling the tar kettle exploded, the men fled to safety.

A section of one tank was catapulted about 100 metres through the air and struck George Farkas, 66, on the leg as he walked towards his car at 3201 Richmond.

Farkas was taken to hospital for examination and later released.

Said McGregor: "He was a very lucky man. A couple of inches and he would have been a very dead man."

Firemen had the blaze out within 30 minutes. The college cancelled all afternoon classes but re-opened for its night courses.

Rinfret said he understands the roofers had gone on their lunch break.

"If they left the tar kettle unattended, I'll want to know why," he said.

Rinfret said the damage may affect the opening of the building — set for Sept. 1 — but added he won't know for sure until he completes an assessment this weekend.

Freighter hit reef: Coast Guard

VANCOUVER (UPC) — A Coast Guard report says the ill-fated freighter Lee Wang Zin hit Celestial Reef in Dixon Entrance on her way out to sea, causing her to capsize Christmas Day with the loss of all 30 crew members aboard.

The report, entered as evidence Thursday into the deaths of two of the crewmen whose bodies were recovered, said that photographs of the capsized hull prior to grounding off Kendrick Island inside Alaskan waters show "bow damage consistent with grounding."

The vessel overturned just off the northern tip of the Queen Charlotte Islands Dec. 25 after leaving Prince Rupert with a load of iron ore pellets bound for Japan.

The report also said that, although it has been stated the Lee Wang Zin was well-operated and well-equipped, only a small-scale chart of Dixon Entrance was observed by a Canadian pilot in the chart-room.

Previous witnesses had speculated that the vessel grounded on Celestial Reef and that the subsequent intake of water caused her cargo to shift, resulting in the capsizing.

The Coast Guard said weather conditions at the time of an SOS call were not considered severe for a vessel of the Lee Wang Zin's size. Winds were southeast at 30 knots and waves were not in excess of about six metres.

The report noted that there was no sign of life when the upturned hull of the vessel was first sighted by a coast guard helicopter.

"But it was observed that the bow of the vessel was damaged."

Greenpeace backs off on roe threat

By MIKE HUGHES

There will be no confrontation on the herring roe grounds this year between members of the Greenpeace Foundation and the fishermen.

Greenpeace president Patrick Moore said in an interview Thursday from Vancouver the environmental group has decided such a showdown would be counterproductive at this time.

Greenpeace announced last November that it was contemplating direct confrontation to "bring attention to the abuse of our herring stocks."

That threat sparked an angry reaction from fishermen's groups which predicted there would be bloodshed and general disaster if the Greenpeacers took such action.

Moore said Thursday there are signs of flexibility and a change of attitude about the herring fishery on the part of the fishermen, the fish companies and the federal fisheries department.

He said the cause of that change of attitude was "a little pin prick from us."

"There appeared to be a cozy relationship developing between the fishermen's union, the fisheries and the industry in Japan," he said, which was resulting in an unstable situation.

But now there seems to be some rethinking going on and Greenpeace is "satisfied for now."

Although there won't be any direct confrontation, Moore said Greenpeace will be keeping a close watch on the industry and may have observers on the grounds when the season opens sometime next month.

Pressed to provide more specifics as to just what changes had taken place as a result of Greenpeace, Moore said only that the public now has a better awareness of possible problems in the industry.

He said the federal fisheries department has also been "put on notice" by Greenpeace and if the industry appears in danger of collapse, there could be a confrontation in the future.

The fisheries department's efforts to cut down the amount of gear on the herring grounds by reducing the number of allowable gillnetters' nets and calling for a pooling arrangement by the seiners are noble efforts, Moore said.

"Just how effective they will be has yet to be seen."

Greenpeace still doesn't feel the federal government has produced any good herring management programs such as fish enhancement or habitat protection.

Nor does there seem to be any consideration given to different methods of getting the roe without killing the herring, Moore said.

Greenpeace's policy is that the gillnetting and seining of herring for roe should be phased out and be replaced by methods which do not require the killing of the fish.

Right now, the gold-rush mentality associated with the fishery is "exploitive and extinctive," Moore said.

He said his organization will be watching closely to see whether the fishery produces this year's quota of 35,000 tons of herring for roe purposes.

"They are going to look awfully stupid if they have overestimated again."

New York

The New York stock market took another sharp drop today, depressed by some bad inflation news and a new credit-tightening move by the Federal Reserve Board.

Before the opening the labor department reported that its producer price index rose at a 19.2-per-cent seasonally adjusted annual rate in January. That marked the biggest increase in the index of wholesale prices for finished goods in more than 5½ years.

A short while later the Federal Reserve raised its discount rate — the rate it charges on loans to its member commercial banks — to 13 from 12 per cent.

The Reserve said the credit-tightening measure was prompted by recent inflationary pressures, including rising prices of imported oil.

Point-plus losses were common among the oil stocks. Exxon fell 1¼ to $63⅝; Mobil 1¼ to $62⅛, and Standard Oil of California 1¾ to $69.

London

The London stock market was lower near the close of trading today.

The Financial Times index dropped 8.3 to 465.6.

Industrials, golds and banks declined.

Canadian stocks eased.

Westinghouse

Westinghouse Canada Ltd. had net earnings of $26.8 million or $10.01 a share in 1979, compared with $8.2 million or $3.08 the previous year, the company reports in Toronto.

The figures do not reflect extraordinary items which in 1979 reduced income by $812,000 or 30 cents a share and in 1978 increased earnings by $416,000 or 16 cents.

The 1978 figures also reflect the effects of lengthy strikes at five manufacturing plants.

Lake Ontario

Lake Ontario Cement Ltd. has reported sales in 1979 of $88 million, an all time record, but predicts a slight downturn in cement shipments in 1980 due to a drop in housing starts.

The company says sales were 13 percent higher than in 1978 and the net operating profit of $4.9 million or $1.15 per share was '57 percent higher than the year before.

Saratoga

Saratoga Processing Co. Ltd. has reported net income of $340,311 in 1979 compared with $328,807 in the previous year.

Operating revenues were $3.66 million compared with $3.54 in 1978, the company said in a news release. Earnings per common share were 70 cents, up from 66 cents.

Saratoga, the owner and operator of a gas gathering and processing system and a sulphur extraction plant in southwestern Alberta, is a subsidiary of Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. of Vancouver.

U.S. wholesale price rise highest since late 1974

Times News Services

The U.S. wholesale-price increase for January was the highest in five years, it was reported in Washington today.

Last month's surge in U.S. wholesale prices of 1.6 per cent — the biggest monthly jump since November, 1974 — was propelled by sharply higher gasoline and home heating oil prices, which wiped out an 0.8 per cent drop in food prices, the labor department reported.

The average cost of consumer durables ready for retail advanced 3.2 per cent in January, following 1.6 per cent and 1 per cent increases in December and November, respectively.

Much of this acceleration was caused by a 54.6 per cent increase in household flatware, and a 22.5 per cent rise in precious metal jewelry, a reflection of the recent international gold and silver rush.

Despite a fall-off in U.S. auto sales, wholesale car prices rose two per cent last month, compared with only a 0.6-per cent increase in December, the department said.

Gasoline prices rose 5.7 per cent last month or an average of 7.2 cents a gallon, 2.5 per cent more than in December; while home heating oil prices rose two per cent, following a 0.1 per cent rise in December.

January's wholesale-price jump nearly doubled December's revised 0.9 per cent increase, worsening the U.S. inflation rate. In 1979, U.S. wholesale prices rose an average of 1 per cent a month.

The prices announcement — coupled with the news that the Federal Reserve Board had raised its discount rate for the fourth time in the past 12 months — sent the New York Stock Exchange down sharply.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which skidded 10.07 points Thursday, was off 13.57 points to 880.2 by 2 p.m. EST.

In hiking the discount rate — the rate it charges member banks — to 13 per cent from 12 per cent, the board said it had acted out of fear of inflation. An increased in the discount generally means a rise in consumer interest rates in an effort to reduce borrowing.

The first government report on inflation in the 1980s said consumers can expect no relief in the months ahead.

Inflation in 1979 advanced by 13.3 per cent, the biggest jump in 33 years. President Carter has estimated that prices should rise by another 10.4 per cent this year, even though he believes the overall economy will experience a mild recession.

The new figures may increase the pressure on Carter to bring in wage and price controls, a move advocated by Senator Teddy Kennedy, his main challenger for the Democratic nomination in this year's presidential election.

Meanwhile, The Business Council, a group of more than 200 executives of major U.S. companies, has revised its economic forecast for the year but is still predicting a recession.

This revised outlook, however, assumes the recession will be milder than originally predicted.

The recession, predicted in the council's January forecast to begin this quarter, will now be delayed until the second quarter.

OPEC profits increase 40%

GENEVA (Reuter) — A major international trade review said today the world's major oil producing countries achieved record export earnings of more than $200 billion in 1979.

The report said the earnings registered by the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries represent an increase of about 40 per cent over 1978.

Their imports dropped by about four per cent, resulting in a current account surplus of $60 billion. By contrast, the deficit of developing countries outside the oil cartel rose to $50 billion in 1979 from $30 billion in 1978.

The review said world output of farm products declined in 1979 for only the second time since the Second World War, due mainly to a fall in cereal crops in some communist and developing countries.

Rates of inflation increased throughout the world, with consumer prices rising by 11 per cent in industrialized countries and by about 30 per cent in developing countries.

The review said economic expansion in the Soviet Union and its Eastern European allies slowed for the second successive year.

The growth of national income in these countries dropped to its lowest rate since 1945, mainly because of the fall in farm output.

At the same time, their exports to the West increased more than their imports, causing a reduction in the combined Soviet trade deficit.

China's imports grew faster than its exports and, as a result, the trade deficit doubled last year to about $2 billion.

The review was prepared by the secretariat of the 85-country General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the world's leading trade monitoring agency.

Gas firm won't convert

A Winnipeg firm, Intercity Gas Utilities Ltd., has not offered to pay the cost of converting Vancouver Island home furnaces from oil to natural gas, Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele said today.

He was clarifying an earlier report which said the firm would undertake the conversions.

Steele said he told a meeting of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada Thursday night that perhaps the federal government would pay the cost of the conversion.

In his speech, Steele repeated a statement made Feb. 11 that Intercity Gas Utilities Ltd. was prepared to construct a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island at no cost to B.C. taxpayers.

The chamber is sponsoring a panel discussion on various natural gas proposals at noon Feb. 20.

Pan-Alberta applies for gas export

OTTAWA (CP) — Pan-Alberta Gas Ltd. of Calgary has applied to the National Energy Board for permission to export to the United States an extra 1.4 trillion cubic feet of Alberta gas. The extra exports would be in addition to its share of 1.8 trillion cubic feet of the 3.75 trillion cubic feet in exports approved by the government late last year.

Before the Judge

A 24-year-old Victoria man who was accidently bugged with a stolen tape recorder was sentenced to concurrent two-year terms after pleading guilty Thursday in provincial court to breaking into six businesses last October.

Judge William Ostler handed out the sentence to Joseph Henry Derepentigny, 1337 Songhurst.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Derepentigny and a companion, who received a suspended sentence Nov. 28, were caught when a silent alarm went off about 4:30 a.m. Oct. 18. Laughton also said that one of the items taken the same night from Copeland's Communications, 1218 Langley, was a tape recorder which was accidently turned on by one of the pair and recorded virtually the entire evening's sequence of break-ins.

Laughton said other break-ins took place Oct. 10 at the Chinese Village Restaurant, 755 Finlayson; Oct. 14 at the Royal Canadian Legion's Trafalgar branch, 1417 Broad; Oct. 15 at a city parkade ticket booth, 740 View, and Oct. 18 at Tyee Service, 100 Esquimalt, and Island Color Lab, 1218 Langley.

An 18-year-old who received a 10-month jail sentence nine days ago for two break-ins, got another 10-month term Thursday from Ostler for another count of breaking and entering.

Gordon Raymond Portice pleaded guilty to a June 6 break-in at 916 Johnson Street.

Court was told the break-in was at the Metropolitan United Church's youth services building at about 10 p.m.

Ostler placed Portice on another 18-month probation term and ordered him to take psychiatric or other counselling as directed.

Calling the assault "vicious" and the theft of money from a sleeping woman "contemptible," Ostler gave a 22-year-old man jail sentences of one month and 14 days, to be served consecutively.

Robert Charles Stanley, 120 Gorge Road East, pleaded guilty to assault causing bodily harm and theft over $200.

Laughton said the assault took place Jan. 29 when the victim, walking in the 500-block Fort, asked Stanley for a cigarette.

Stanley said he didn't have one, words were exchanged and Stanley then punched the man, who received fractured ribs and facial injuries.

However, Stanley was not arrested for that offence until Feb. 9, when he was charged with the theft.

Court was informed the victim, Patricia Lecoy of 1420 Camosun, fell asleep at her residence at 6 a.m. and Stanley left with $360.

Lecoy and some friends caught up with Stanley at the Hotel Douglas, but Stanley ran to the Victoria police station where he claimed she was going to make false accusations about a theft.

Police returned with Stanley to the hotel, where he was eventually arrested and returned to the police station. A search there produced a $20 bill in one of his shoes and he admitted the theft. A further $280 was found in a second-floor ashtray in the hotel where Stanley told officers he had hidden the money.

Ostler imposed the one-month sentence on the theft and a further 14 days on the assault.

Possession of five "hits" of LSD resulted in a 20-day jail sentence for 19-year-old Raymond Glen Briscoe.

Ostler noted that Briscoe was on probation from a charge of possession of stolen property. He was convicted of that charge Jan. 8, 1979, in Rossland and was given a suspended sentence.

$191,000 mishap award, less 20%

A B.C. Supreme Court jury Thursday night awarded a 29-year-old Sidney man $191,000 because of a traffic accident but discounted this by 20 per cent because he wasn't wearing a seatbelt.

The award, in favor of Charles Arthur Fields and against Russ G. Lloyd of Mill Bay, came at the end of a four-day trial.

Fields was a passenger in a car travelling north on the Malahat near the split-rock lookout on Jan. 19, 1979, when Lloyd's vehicle crossed the double solid centre line and collided head on.

Fields suffered a depressed skull fracture and other injuries including the loss of one finger.

Fields' lawyer, Ronald MacIsaac, immediately asked Mr. Justice Hugh Legg to enter judgment but this was opposed by George Kincaid of Vancouver, counsel for Lloyd, who said the jury's award of $150,000 for future income loss was unreasonable and not in accord with the evidence and judgment should be entered for a lower amount.

Legg reserved his decision, saying he hoped to be prompt with his answer.

EMI jumper's appeal rejected

The B.C. Court of Appeal has unanimously rejected a bid by a 29-year-old Victoria woman to upset a 1978 B.C. Supreme Court decision which dismissed her action for negligence against Eric Martin Institute.

Theresa Anne Worth leaped from the second-floor roof garden Nov. 2, 1973, and was paralyzed in both legs.

Mr. Justice Kirke Smith dismissed her action but said if he hadn't, the award would be $182,820.

The three-member Court of Appeal decision said witnesses testified that probably something can always be done to make a mental institution more escape proof but the result is something resembling a maximum security prison "and that for all but the most seriously mentally-disordered, such a setting would be harmful rather than therapeutic."

The court ruled that EMI, including the roof gardens fence, "though not necessarily perfect, conformed to the standard of care which the hospital had to provide to its patients."

Hunters thwarted in rites appeal

An appeal by two Indians against a conviction for hunting deer out of season last June was dismissed Thursday by county court Judge Montague Drake.

Anderson Jack, 54, and George Louis Charlie, 51, of Brentwood, said the deer was to be burned to satisfy a need of dead ancestors and had the character of a religious mission.

But that argument didn't satisfy Drake.

He said there is freedom of religion in Canada but a distinction is drawn between liberty of thought and liberty of conduct deriving from that.

"To take an extreme example, an old-fashioned Aztec in this country could believe as he wished, but when he practised his rite of human sacrifice he would have to answer for it at the Assizes," Drake said in his written judgment.

City man hopeful for East-West talks

By AB KENT

Victoria geographer Dr. Derrick Sewell takes a hopeful view that talks on East-West co-operation in Hamburg next week won't be prejudiced by the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan.

Sewell is one of four Canadian scientists who will attend the assessment meeting on the effect of the Helsinki Accords signed by 35 nations of the eastern and western blocs in 1975.

The others are all from Eastern Canada.

Sewell will deliver a paper covering the ways in which funds to help reduce the poverty gap might be given priority over some other areas of research and development such as arms and the space race.

Sewell, chairman of the geography department at University of Victoria, refused to predict what action might be taken at the meeting by other signatories of the Accords, in which the U.S. and U.S.S.R. are the leading participants.

Poverty — the gap between rich and poor — is at the root of difficulties in the world as a whole, Sewell believes, noting that half of the $150 billion spent globally each year on research and development activities is applied to military and space research.

This reflects largely the part undertaken by countries with advanced technology and what they perceive as priorities, he said.

At the same time, one-quarter of the world starves and the planet is increasingly polluted.

Sewell has been involved for a number of years in international studies for water demand forecasting and has worked with others at the International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis at Vienna. He is also working with UNESCO on world-wide interdisciplinary research.

He said there is a good level of co-operation between eastern and western bloc members in the IIASA project.

The Frankfurt meeting was called at the suggestion of the West Germans, who felt the time was appropriate, five years after the Accords were signed, to see to what extent the scientific aspects have been put into place, Sewell said.

A full review of the Accords is scheduled to take place this year in Madrid.

When an assessment meeting was held in Belgrade the winter of 1977-78, Russia nearly caused its failure when criticized for failing to honor human rights principles. The Soviets said the criticism amounted to internal meddling.

Dog virus here not widespread

A new viral disease that is killing dogs on the Lower Mainland and other areas of the province is not a problem in the Victoria area, local veterinarians said Wednesday.

Several city veterinarians have treated isolated cases of the virus but all say there is no need for panic.

The virus — parvovirus enteritis — seems to vary widely in severity.

Puppies less than six weeks, or old dogs, seem to be the hardest hit, says Dr. Suann Hosie of the B.C. Veterinary Medical Association.

Dr. K.P. Kowal of the Esquimalt Veterinary Clinic said the best preventative measure known to date is vaccination with a feline distemper vaccine.

Kowal said the virus is similar to feline distemper but it only affects dogs and is not harmful to humans.

It causes inflammation of the heart and weakens the heart muscle, said Hosie. Symptoms are vomiting and diarrhea, which might have blood in it. There is fever, as well as extreme weakness and dehydration.

Kowal said dog breeders or people who travel the show circuit should have their dogs vaccinated but said he isn't recommending it as a general practice.

It's not known whether it's a new disease or simply a newly-recognized disease, he said, but research is being done on its cause and treatment.

It's transmitted by touching or sniffing and the virus has a long life, he said.

As a result, it can be transmitted fairly readily, especially at dogs shows and similar events.

Guilty plea in fire

A 17-year-old youth pleaded guilty in Victoria provincial court Thursday to mischief causing wilful damage to five camper units at Poole's RV Traveland, 1080 Goldstream, Wednesday night.

Judge William Ostler remanded William Allan Scott Gushowaty, 2785 Hartsdale, in custody until next Thursday for a pre-sentence report and sentencing.

Gushowaty and a juvenile were charged after two 13-foot travel trailers were destroyed by fire about 10 p.m.

Colwood RCMP picked up the 15-year-old juvenile at the scene while Gushowaty was arrested a few hours later.

Langford volunteer firemen brought the blaze under control before it spread to eight other trailer units parked nearby.

Rec centre contract awarded

Architect John Di Castri and Terry Farmer Construction Ltd. have been awarded a contract to design and estimate construction costs of a recreation centre on Salt Spring Island.

The Capital Regional District's board decided Wednesday that up to $16,000 be used for this study.

The Salt Spring Island Parks and Recreation Commission, which had asked the board for financial assistance, received nine submissions from various architects and builders last November.

Of these, four were asked to give further information. The final selection was made by the commission on Jan. 28.

Rehearsal for tanker disaster

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 124,000-ton tanker Prince William Sound passed through the Valdez Narrows Jan. 17 fully loaded with 831,000 barrels of Alaska crude oil.

As it approached the southern entrance to Prince William Sound, the lovely island-flecked stretch of water for which the tanker was named, winds were gusting to 40 knots and moderate swells were building.

There was no hint that anything might go wrong on the seven-day voyage to El Segundo, Calif., until suddenly, Captain Lawrence Wade saw that engine revolutions were falling rapidly.

Instinctively, he ordered the helm hard to port and as the big ship answered the rudder, with the last turn of the screw, she lurched into a 180-degree turn, heading back toward more open water.

The boilers shut down, propulsion ceased, as did the steam-powered generator, plunging the ship into momentary darkness. Within minutes the Prince William Sound had become a dead ship, floating at the mercy of the currents and the wind, which by this time was gusting to 70 knots. Waves were six metres high.

For the next 16 hours, as conditions grew progressivley worse, the tanker drifted helplessly. Tugboats and the United States Coast Guard cutter Sweetbrier stood by — and that proved to be a dangerous assignment. One tug was partly swamped by heavy seas and had to be assisted to safety.

By the time the tanker's emergency diesel generator produced enough power to restore lights, radar and other vital equipment and the tanker was finally able to make way under its own power, it had drifted 50 kilometres, almost the entire length of the sound off the Alaska coast and was less than half an hour from the rocky shoal off Fairmount Island at the northern end of the sound.

Coast guard commander James Woodle said the tanker would almost certainly have run aground on an island only six nautical miles away, had the captain not made that u-turn.

The resulting spill of 800,000 barrels of oil — or even a tenth of that amount — would have been an ecological disaster from which the sound, a lucrative fishing area, would have been a long time recovering.

The incident caused barely a ripple of interest in Alaska, but down the coast in Vancouver, where there are growing fears a major oil spill is inevitable, experts said it was just a dress rehearsal for disaster.

In heavy seas, with a strong westerly blowing, a loaded supertanker that loses power in the Strait of Juan de Fuca would end up on the beaches of southwestern Vancouver Island.

The only thing that could avert certain disaster would be immediate assistance by tugs powerful enough to take it under tow.

The amount of oil carried through the strait has tripled since 1970 and is expected to increase dramatically if an oil superport is built at Port Angeles, Wash., 29 kilometres across the strait from Victoria.

Captain Ian Young, the Canadian Coast Guard's regional manager of emergency operations, doubts that a tugboat rescue operation could be mounted in time.

"We don't have tugs on standby for towing away any casualties," he said. "We can't afford the luxury of giving a subsidy to private companies on a standy basis.

"All their tugs are operating around, but if there is a casualty it is by no means certain they would be able to respond and, anyway, it would take time. It would take several hours to reach a stricken vessel in the Puget Sound area, for example.

"If the wind is blowing 50 to 60 knots, then the vessel could be on the beach — there is no question about that. And if you've got a dead ship, how do you take those heavy lines aboard?

"The only way you could possibly do it is for the towing vessel to go right alongside. But if there's any weather and a sea running, you can't bring a tug alongside because it would be too dangerous."

The coast guard's ship safety branch determined last October that there is a one-in-10,000 chance each year of a tanker in Juan de Fuca Strait being involved in a close-quarters situation. But, it also said there is a 75-per-cent probability that the U.S. West coast tanker fleet would be involved in a pollution incident during a 20-year period with a probable loss of 387 tons of oil.

Dr. Andrew Thompson, law professor at the University of B.C. and comissioner of the West Coast Oil Port Inquiry, outlined to National Energy Board hearings last October four near collisions and losses of steerage involving oil tankers in the strait over one six-month period.

Judge to view slag radiation

VANCOUVER (CP) — A B.C. Supreme Court judge said Thursday he was prepared to take a view of a radioactive slag site in Surrey to resolve any dispute over the quantity of any thorium on the property.

Mr. Justice M. R. Taylor said if necessary he will go out to the property and watch radioactive detection instruments while the property is being surveyed.

The question arose in a court action in which C. R. F. Holdings Ltd. is suing Fundy Chemical International and Mark Gerald Smerchanski for alleged fraudulent representations that industrial waste materials on the three-acre property could safely be used as fill.

C. R. F. bought the property for $260,000 in 1974, built a $500,000 warehouse and blacktop parking lot and then discovered that the fill was radioactive.

Justice Taylor said he would go out to the site after William Rachuk, University of B.C. radiation detection officer, said he could not correlate the radiation detection instrument readings with the amount of thorium.

Earlier, Gerald O'Connor, who handled the sale of the property, said he would not have done so if he had known there was any radioactive material on the property.

"Ever since Hiroshima I would have been a little bit afraid," he said.

The case continues.

Liquor bribes never offered

Tex Enemark, who headed the provincial Liquor Distribution Branch when RCMP began a two-year investigation into possible distillery kickbacks to government employees, said Thursday no bribes were ever offered.

Enemark, a former consumer and corporate affairs deputy minister, also said in an interview there was never any political pressure put on him or the branch.

"No politician or minister or MLA or aide or person associated with any political party ever suggested to me, or to anybody in the branch, that anything be done with respect to listing or shelf position or anything where money would change hands for influencing."

Enemark said when he took over direct control of the branch in 1978, he wanted to be sure nothing untoward had been happening, and "I had Vancouver City Police, the RCMP and the Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit come in, and they spent several weeks going over every scrap of paper in the branch to see if there was any evidence of anything at that time."

"I was eventually told that they had been unable to establish any wrongdoing by anybody."

A television broadcast Tuesday night disclosed details of the Quebec inquiry into dealings between distillers and government employees in that province that resulted in bribery charges being laid against 26 distilleries and wineries two weeks ago.

The CBC program The Fifth Estate said documents found in a raid on distillers across the country included cancelled cheques made out by liquor companies for the provincial wings of all three major political parties.

It said the Social Credit party in B.C. was also a beneficiary of lump-sum political payments. Campaign contributions are not illegal in B.C.

Enemark, who now works for publishers McLean-Hunter Ltd., said when he took over the branch, he put an end to the practice where liquor salesmen contributed $10 or so to the employees' coffee fund every time they checked shelves in liquor stores.

Maggie and Pierre show filled with zingy one-liners

By TRISH WORRON

TORONTO (CP) — Maggie and Pierre, a one-woman show which opened Thursday, has proven once again that Canada's most famous couple is still very much a subject of speculation.

It also proved that Linda Griffiths is an exceptionally talented actress who can overcome the improbable feat of playing three different characters in one show — displaying at times a standup comic's timing with zingy one-liners, and at others, a sensitive dramatic portrayal.

The play, already well publicized through extensive coverage during its earlier previews, has been the subject of interest throughout the world and organizers hope to tour several Canadian cities after its five-week Toronto run ends.

Ms. Griffiths also wrote the piece, which she says is speculation about factual events in the couple's lives. She makes no pretense at disguising her subjects and based her play on research she conducted with journalists and acquaintances in Ottawa after Trudeau's May 22 defeat.

The 26-year-old actress looks amazingly like Mrs. Trudeau, and with the characteristic shrug and pursing of the lips can quickly become a plausible Pierre. Her third character, Henry, — recognizable to television viewers as one of the hordes of journalists who thrust microphones in politicians' faces — is a sympathetic character who mirrors the public's obsession with the couple.

"All right, so they get married have a couple of kids, break up, she goes a little wild and he loses his job and tries to get it back," Henry says.

"What's the big deal," he asks and then goes on to try to explain "why those two have always bugged everyone so much."

The play begins with a 19-year-old Margaret in Tahiti, contemplating whether to "open a school for the mentally retarded or do some really good drugs," when she meets her future husband. It ends with her manic dance in Studio 54 the night Trudeau loses the election.

In between, the young, idealistic wife learns protocol — to only talk about the weather and having babies — and tries to deal with an RCMP officer following her every move. She moans, "Who am I going to hang lose with, Mrs. Michener?"

She finally tells her husband, "I want out of Confederation. All those guys at Confederation were drunk — John A. Macdonald got them to sign a piece of paper and make a country. Let's get out of here and hae some fun."

Pierre is seen mainly through Henry, who idolized the man, his vision and the flair he brought to Canadian politics.

"Suddenly the eyes of the world were on Ottawa where the biggest thing that happened in 15 years was the flag debate," Henry says.

Henry believes that Margaret, "innocent, naive and not-straight," was supposed to balance Trudeau's act. "She's not establishment and Trudeau always thought of himself as the great rebel all his life."

In the end, Henry's and Trudeau's respect for one another wains.

Trudeau tells the journalist: "I talk issues and you write personalities. You say I'm arrogant because arrogance sells newspapers."

Henry retorts: "You betrayed me, you betrayed all of us. You made us idealists and made us believe that things could change."

Sweet, kissy Melissa blossoms

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Six years ago as a buck-toothed, freckled moppet of 9, Melissa Gilbert stole into the hearts of TV viewers in the Little House On The Prairie and has remained firmly entrenched there ever since.

Melissa, as Laura Ingalls, will become engaged in this season's final episode and will be married on the show next year. In 1982 — if the popular series is still on the air — Laura will have a baby.

Affectionately known as "Half Pint" to the cast and crew, Melissa, off-screen and on, is an engaging youngster who, through design or pure chance, has remained unspoiled by stardom.

She is unfailingly cheerful on the set, a model of professional conduct and polite respect for her elders.

Melissa is also sometimes called Lissy. She's a kissy little thing who plants busses impartially on the cheeks of stagehands, directors, fellow actors and Michael Landon who plays her father and runs the series.

Her kisses on screen, so far, have been innocent pecks. But her embrace with her fiance (played by Dean Butler) in the season finale is passionate and adult which will require a great deal of acting on Melissa's part.

Unlike many of her peers in fast-paced Hollywood, Melissa at 15 is not allowed to date. While she is a sophisticated actress, she is an innocent away from the cameras. She has no boyfriends and few close pals aside from the TV company.

She lives in a beautiful, roomy home in the San Fernando Valley with her mother, Barbara, her stepfather Harry Abeles, an attorney, and her younger sister and brother.

When the NBC show is not in production, Melissa attends a private high school not far from her home.

Marijuana and "making out" are altogether alien to her.

If Melissa lags behind her schoolmates in teen-age tribal rites, she is light years ahead of them in her knowledge of show business and pursuit of a career.

She has her own company, Half Pint Productions, which made The Miracle Worker for the network last year. She played Helen Keller opposite Patty Duke Astin as Annie Sullivan, Keller's nurse and mentor.

Currently, Melissa is working with her manager and other advisers on a TV movie version of The Diary of Anne Frank at 20th Century-Fox to be produced while Little House is on hiatus this spring.

Melissa refuses to consider the possibility of dropping from sight while she goes through the so-called "awkward stage" which put an end to the careers of such child stars as Jackie Coogan, Shirley Temple and Margaret O'Brien.

Laurence TV program set

OTTAWA (CP) — The 1,000,000th copy of a book by Margaret Laurence, who has said she will not write another but is doing so, will go on sale somewhere in the world this spring.

An hour-long interview and documentary on the Manitoba-born author not originally intended for general public viewing will be broadcast by the CBC-TV English network Feb. 27, and while she thought negatively about contributing to it at first, she likes it.

These are just a few of the contradictions in the story of the girl from Neepawa.

Growing up during the Second World War in the strict Presbyterian home of her grandfather, Laurence found she was in an all-girl grade 12 class because all the boys her age had gone to war. She left the "dull, bleak, flat, uninteresting" town of her birth to go to United College in Winnipeg.

Maturity brought marriage to a returning RCAF airman, two children, and residence in Africa where he became an engineer. They separated in 1962 and she bought a cottage in Buckinghamshire, England, where she thought she would have the quiet and the inspiration to write.

But that "dull, bleak, flat, uninteresting" country of her birth remained "in my skull," and her first books written in England were about Neepawa and the people she knew — which she called the town and people of Manawaka.

Five of them now have been published and reprinted to form a paperback set. From the first, The Stone Angel, she was hailed as one of Canada's most popular authors, and she has since won the Governor-General's award for literature and been made a Companion of the Order of Canada.

She says in the film that after writing her fifth book in the Manawaka series, she will not write again. But there are reports she has started another book at her home in Lakefield, Ont., where the interviews were recorded.

National Film Board writer-director Robert Duncan sought her out more than a year ago to do a film about her.

Times wins cartoon appeal

Nemetz said the statements and actions of Vander Zalm including the statements concerning Indians publicized only a few days before the cartoon "provided the necessary sub-stratum of sufficiently publicized facts to enable the ordinary reader to recognize the nexus of the cartoon and the statements."

"Ordinary and reasonable persons in this country are well acquainted with the allegorical nature of political cartoons and, in my opinion, would have little difficulty in recognizing this cartoon as a comment upon such facts, a comment indeed of the very sort which Mr. Bierman testified he intended to make.

"Nor can it be doubted that the facts commented upon were matters of considerable public interest and concerned the minister in his public rather than in his personal capacity."

Nemetz concluded that Bierman honestly expressed his real view and "it is my respectful view that the cartoon represents fair comment on a matter of public interest."

Mr. Justice E.E. Hinkson said in his judgement: "In my view it was not intended that the cartoon be taken literally by the readers of the newspaper, nor do I believe that the average reader would do so. Political cartoons are familiar to readers of newspapers and are known to employ both caricature and symbolism to convey their message."

Hinkson said it is clear that because of the label "Human Resources" on the figure portrayed in the cartoon it was intended to refer to the public life of Vander Zalm rather than his private life.

Mr. Justice Peter Seaton said cartoonists do not have special rights and the law is the same for them as everyone else.

"A cartoon is but a particular means of communicating and it is subject to the same law as other means," Seaton said.

"It does not follow for the purposes of defamation cartoons are to be interpreted literally. That is not how they are seen by ordinary persons or by the law."

He agreed with Munroe that the cartoon was not amusing but a cartoon can be in bad taste and not be defamatory.

"If this trial, held in Victoria in 1979, had taken place with a jury I am not at all sure that the cartoon would have been found to be defamatory," he said, adding that in view of his agreement in the defence of fair comment he needn't go further.

Mr. Justice J.A. Aikins said Munroe was in error in finding that the cartoon would be understood as meaning that Vander Zalm was a person of a cruel and sadistic nature who enjoys inflicting suffering on helpless persons.

He said the reasonable man of ordinary intelligence would clearly understand that political cartoons are rhetorical in the sense that the cartoonist makes his point indirectly by use of symbolism, allegory, or satire and exaggeration, and the reasonable man of ordinary intelligence would not look at the cartoon in a vaccuum.

"He would understand that it was a political cartoon — the label 'Human Resources' on the figure shows this — in the context of his general knowledge of the respondent as a poltical figure."

Mr. Justice William Craig asked if the cartoon would tend to lower Vander Zalm in the estimation of right-thinking members of society.

"Many newspaper readers would, probably, not even notice the cartoon. Many who noticed it would give it only cursory glance. Some might be amused by it. Some might be angered by it. Some might consider it reflected more on the judgement of the cartoonist than on the qualities of the respondent. Whatever the reaction I am inclined to the view that the so-called right-thinking members of society generally would not change their estimation of the plaintive merely because of the cartoon."

Craig said that although this was his own reaction, he could not say that Munroe was clearly wrong in finding the cartoon defamatory. So Craig said he proceeded on the premise that it was defamatory and then considered the defence of fair comment.

"Many would regard the cartoon as anything but fair comment. On the other hand, I think that there was a basis upon which the appellants could properly rely upon the defense of fair comment," he said.

Turkish violence

closed because of the violence.

Large slum areas are controlled now by the militants, who have started to set up so-called People's Committees. With skirmishes still going on, strikes continuing, most of the shops closed and the main streets deserted, Izmir looks like a war-torn city.

Terrorist attacks have spread to other parts of Turkey, too. In Istanbul, a train was attacked last week and three passengers were killed. Leftist militants have claimed responsibility for raids on police stations and seizure of arms.

In Tunceli, gendarmes opened fire with automatic rifles on leftist workers demonstrating in the eastern Turkish city 950 kilometres from Izmir in support of the cotton-yarn factory workers. One worker was killed and three wounded, two of them severely.

Further east in Kars, close to the Soviet border, leftists bombed a number of banks, but no casulaties were reported.

In Istanbul, Turkey's biggest city with a population of almost five million, a group of left-wing students were involved in a gun battle with the police. One student was killed.

In some quarters of Istanbul, militants have forced hundreds of shopkeepers to close down in protest against recent price rises. In spite of warnings from martial law authorities, many frightened shopkeepers complied with the militants' threats.

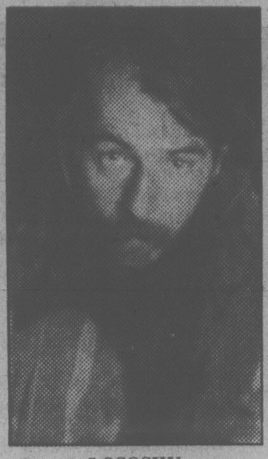
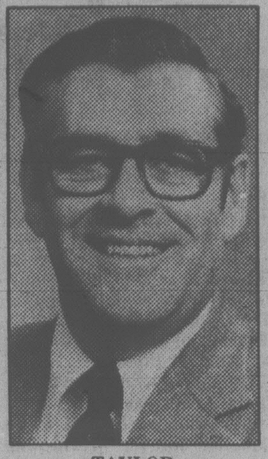
This election they feel like flipping a coin

MANLY
. . . good NDP chance

GERVAIS
. . . Liberal spoiler



LOSOSKY
. . . Rhino outsider



TAYLOR
. . . Tory incumbent

KNOTT
. . . Communist hopeful

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A cold, grey mist hangs over Cowichan Bay as Bruce Robertson works on the rigging of his troller, Pacific King, docked at the fishermen's wharf.

How's he going to vote? He ponders the question.

"I guess the same as last time," he says. "I'll just flip a coin."

Robertson's flippant reply is fairly typical of the voters in this large, sprawling riding of Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

Even at this stage with the countdown to polling day almost over, there is widespread uncertainty among the ridings's 58,000-plus voters on how they will vote.

"It's all so mixed up a person can't even form an opinion," says Claude Furlong of Ladysmith. "No one seems to know what he's doing.

"It's the most confusing election I've ever seen."

If there are logical, cogent reasons why someone should vote one way or another, most voters have been unable to find them.

No one is forecasting the outcome of this race. It's strictly a toss-up between incumbent Conservative Don Taylor, and the New Democratic Party hopeful, Jim Manly.

Liberal Leo Gervais may be a dark horse, but it's doubtful his role will be anything more than spoiler.

Ernie Knott of the Communist Party of Canada, and Rhino Louis (Crowbird) Lesosky round out the list of candidates.

Knott, an inveterate campaigner, enjoys the respect of the others in the race but he'll be lucky to get more than the 81 votes cast in his direction last May.

If Lesosky wins he say's he'll demand an immediate recount. No fear.

To the average resident in the riding which extends from Ladysmith to View Royal and takes in the southern Gulf Islands and West Coast to Nitinat, the election has been low-key and lacklustre, a carbon copy of the May affair and even less wanted.

The national events have so overshadowed the local riding that few persons can even name the local candidates.

There is an undercurrent of hostility and cynicism about the election.

Chides Harold Bissett, a semi-retired contractor living near Ladysmith:

"Those educated idiots back in Ottawa seem to be doing their damnest to mess up the country.

"Why didn't they give Clark a little more time?

"I don't think they are thinking about the welfare of the country when they get us into another election that is going to cost us all another $52 million.

"I voted for Clark last time . . . for a change.

"But this time I don't even know if I'm going to vote. I'm fed up to the teeth. Our politicians aren't using common sense."

Taylor, a 47-year-old former high school teacher, is capitalizing on that feeling of disenchantment.

The main message in his election literature is this is an unwanted election, at least from the Conservative standpoint.

Taylor feels personally gypped. He was just learning the ropes in Ottawa and getting familiar with the three areas he'd selected to monitor — fisheries and forestry, veteran's affairs and Indian affairs — when his party was defeated.

To rub salt into the wound the defeat came on the very day he was scheduled to make his maiden speech in the House.

Manly, on the other hand, is counting on the public's disaffection with Clark to slip past Taylor in the vote count.

In May he lost out by a 1,500-vote margin — 17,471 to 19,025.

He would have won but for the polls south of the Malahat.

From Goldstream on, Taylor took the lead and never looked back.

Actually Taylor's strength started to build as the counts came in just south of Duncan. He took six of the seven polls in Cowichan Bay, lost only one poll at Shawnigan Lake and captured all but 17 of the 90 polls in the western communities.

Surprisingly Taylor won 11 of the 16 polls in Sooke and the single poll at Jordan River which provincially are NDP strongholds.

Manly and his legion of supporters are doing their utmost to woo the voters in those areas.

"We're concentrating on the polls we won," Manly explains. "Our policy is to work from strength."

Most days he and his wife Eva are out door-knocking. He says he's encouraged by the response; it's definitely more favorable. Last May he was bitten by dogs three times, but this year he hasn't been bitten once.

Taylor's strategy is to entrench his support in the areas he won in the south and build up a stronger organization in the Duncan area where the vote was split last time roughly down the middle.

So far he's managed to quadruple the number of scrutineers for election day, a sure sign to Taylor of welling support and interest.

The two men are vastly different in the way they conduct their campaigns.

Taylor is a consummate salesman. Highly organized, he whisks around the hustings like a dervish. Often while canvassing door-to-door he'll jog the route, pausing just long enough to hand the homeowner a copy of his pamphlet. "I'm after your vote," he says with a disarming smile. "Hope you can see your way to support me." And off he goes.

Manly is more circumspect. There's always a hand-shake, a little preamble, and then the inevitable "Do you have any questions?"

A former minister of the United Church in Ladysmith — he resigned in December to devote his energies to his campaign full-time — Manly is trying to change his image as a mild-mannered, soft-spoken sort of fellow.

He realizes he should come across as a more forceful and assertive campaigner.

But it's a struggle to make the adjustment. "All my training (in the church) has been to be a listener to people's concerns," he says.

While he believes that quality is basic to what a politician should be, there are some people in the riding who argue a preacher shouldn't be involved in politics.

Muriel Winter, manager of the Ladysmith NDP office, has a ready answer for them. What about Tommy Douglas, she contends. He was once a minister, too.

Case closed.

Douglas is still the grand old man in these parts. Manly could have used him but Douglas has been in Hawaii the past month enjoying a holiday ironically provided by the party faithful on his retirement last spring. He returns today.

The unknown factor in this election is the Liberal vote. Last May the Liberal candidate, well-known environmentalist David Anderson, got 7,075 votes.

The candidate this time, Leo Gervais, 42, is little known outside Cowichan Valley.

Whether or not he'll be able to attract as many votes as Anderson is probably the most important question in the election. .

If he does, Taylor stands a good chance of being reelected. If he doesn't there could be a swing towards the NDP. That, at least, is Manly's hope.

Like Taylor, Gervais is a school teacher. He has been active in the local Liberal riding association since the mid-1960s.

Gervais has no illusions of victory at this stage. He's primarily out to establish a solid basis for future elections.

His campaign manager Jerry Tothill, wife of the provincial Liberal leader, describes the election strategy as "very loose."

"But that's the Liberal way," she quips.

The Liberals are obviously having the most fun in this election. Then again, they have the least to lose.

Mrs. Tothill notes the strong anti-Trudeau feeling that was rampant last May has all but vanished.

"Last time none of us would have dared to go door-to-door canvassing. We'd have been thrown out on the street," she says.

This time the canvassers have at least been able to go door-knocking without fear of injury.

They've even met some residents who've admitted they are Liberals at heart. But the implication is they may not vote that way.

TOWN TALK

The ballot box holds a fatal fascination for a politician but only if his own future is at stake. At other times, other considerations take over.

Premier Bill Bennett is in Hawaii and has no intention of cutting short his vacation to vote in the federal election Monday. He also failed to vote in the advance polls.

To be fair, if Joe Clark or Pierre Trudeau were from B.C., would they come back from Hawaii to vote for Bill Bennett? Certainly Ed Broadbent wouldn't.

Top student talkers from Western Canada are oiling their tonsils and readying their arguments for Saturday.

Teams from UVic and the Universities of Manitoba, Calgary, Alberta, B.C. and Pearson College will start talking at 9 a.m. sharp in D Wing of the Clerihue Building at UVic in the Western Canada Debating Championships.

Elimination rounds will be held from 9 a.m to 1.30, semi-finals at 3.30 p.m. and the final goes at 4.30 p.m.

Admission will be free, which only goes to prove that talk is cheap.

A link with the past is being severed by the government of British PM Margaret Thatcher, dubbed by her critics, Attila the Hen.

After 429 years, the tiny sixpence (it's about the size of a dime) is being taken out of circulation.

Known in Cockney rhyming slang as a tartan banner for the word tanner, a corruption of the Romany word tawno, meaning young, hence small, the sixpence was even celebrated in that ancient chesnut of a song, I've Got Sixpence, Jolly, Jolly Sixpence.

. . . But not for long, it appears.

Long-time Revenue Canada PR Betty Newton is quitting on election day — but it's not quite what it seems.

Mrs. Newton is not worried about a change in government. It's just that she's been doing the same thing for eight years, including countless trips out of town, and she's packing it in.

Her new assignment looks even more challenging, although it's closer to home. She will become campaign manager and public relations spokesman for the United Way.

Few people who attended this week's concert by the world famous Vienna Choir Boys realized it was a history-making event of sorts.

Michael Gormlay, the conductor on this North American tour, is a Canadian and this was the first time in its near 500-year history that the choir has sung under any other than a Viennese conductor.

To top it off, it was also the first time Gormlay has conducted the choir in a Canadian concert, the group having come directly to Victoria from Alaska.

Boxing loses on split decision

By PAUL MINVIELLE

A feint, a few jabs, a right cross and a few cross jibes and the proposed Victoria athletic commission lost on a split decision by city council Thursday.

Ald. Gretchen Brewin answered the bell for round one of Thursday's meeting with a flailing attack on boxing, lashing out with the statistic that six boxers died annually over the past 15 years, in North America.

"In the last two or three months, there have been four deaths."

Reaching into the magazine Science Digest, she landed a solid blow with the headline: "The Punch Drunk Syndrome: What Really Happens to a Boxer's Brain."

Brewin admitted, however, an athletic commission would ensure that managers, promoters and referees are knowledgeable and qualified.

Winding up for what she hoped was a knockout punch, Brewin threw out a Rudyard Kipling hook: "The end of a fight is a tombstone."

Dancing out quickly in the second round, Ald. Ken Sinclair said the proposed commission would legalize professional and semi-professional bouts in the city and have the power to allow or disallow a fight.

Then he countered Brewin's battering of boxing, declaring: "I don't believe it's the prerogative of this council to dictate what citizens can or can't watch."

He said the commission would avert many of the injuries Brewin had mentioned.

In round three, Ald. John Cooper bobbed and weaved around the six-fatalities-a-year figure.

Cooper claimed there is probably greater damage caused in the National Hockey League and there are 50,000 people killed on U.S. highways every year.

But no one, he said, is considering eliminating the sport of hockey or eliminating all highways.

In the end, the commission avoided a knockout but lost its bid for recognition on a split decision. Council voted 5-3 against it.

Composting issue in Tipton's court

By BRENDA DALGLISH

Metchosin regional director Mac Tipton is being put to the test over the question of a septage composting site.

Capital Regional Board directors agreed this week to purchase a 12-acre site in Metchosin for the proposed operation — next door to Tipton's house.

The CRD plans to turn the sludge from septic tanks into a saleable fertilizer by a composting process.

CRD chief engineer Norman Howard said if the district's health officer, Dr. Allen Arneil, gives his approval to the final product, it will be sold as fertilizer for about $3 a yard.

Tipton said he supported the land purchase because he believes in the concept of composting septage.

He said everyone who has visited a similar operation in Kelowna assures him there is no smell from the site.

"I do hope it will function as they say it will," he said.

Tipton said he intends to contact the Metchosin Ratepayers Association and propose a public meeting if residents want more information on the proposal.

Howard said the CRD has a budget of $400,000 this year for land purchase, start-up and operating costs.

Dr. Arneil will require stringent testing of the material before it can be sold as fertilizer.

The district will continue to charge septic tank disposal operators for dumping of the material, he said, although rates haven't been set.

VGH abortion moratorium

Victoria General Hospital will not perform any abortions until its legal position is totally clear.

Alan Patterson, executive director of the hospital board, said Thursday he has received a preliminary report from the hospital's solicitor and is awaiting more information.

The hospital board sought legal advice last week following receipt of a letter from its three-man therapeutic abortion committee which suggested the board may have acted illegally.

The letter was in reponse to the board's decision to circumvent its abortion committee, which was turning down the vast majority of abortion applications it considered, and replace it with Royal Jubilee Hospital's abortion committee.

Patterson said the VGH board sought an opinion from the attorney-general's ministry in 1972 when it first considered the practise of using two committees.

U.S. trims Czechs on day of shocks

Times News Services

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. — It was a day full of surprises at the Winter Olympics Thursday.

A pair of Austrian dowhill skiers and two Dutch speed skaters humbled the reigning world champions of their sports;

And Czechoslovakia's hockey team, almost everyone's choice to battle the Soviet Union for a gold medal, took a 7-3 trouncing from the United States and suddenly found its chances of reaching the final round in jeopardy. Canada remained undefeated with a 5-1 win over Poland.

While Canada's hopes of winning its first Olympic medal in skiing were fulfilled, the breakthrough was not achieved by Ken Read, the Calgary skier who is fighting Swiss defending champion Peter Mueller for the World Cup downhill title, but by his Toronto teammate, Steve Podborski who came third.

Leonhard Stock's victory in the downhill took the Austrian ski coaches off the hook. Brought along as an alternate, the 21-year-old Tyrolean consistently posted the fastest practice times on the Whiteface Mountain course. Eventually he was named to the team.

Shut out of the medals were World Cup contenders Mueller, who was fourth, and Read, who lost a ski, fell but escaped serious injury. (See story below).

While the hockey road ahead will be a lot easier for the Americans after their win against Czechoslovakia and an earlier 2-2 tie against Sweden, Canada must face its toughest opponents — Finland and the Soviet Union — in the six-team red division.

Lorne Davis, one of three coaches with the Canadian team, said he expects a tough game against Finland on Saturday.

Buzz Schneider, at 25 the senior member of the U.S. team, and linemates Mark Pavelich and John Harrington combined for three goals and four assists against the Czechoslovaks.

Canada scored in every period against Poland.

The Canadians opened quickly against the Polish squad, swarming into the Polish zone from the opening faceoff and maintaining a concerted forechecking effort throughout the contest.

"We wanted to put the pressure on them early and I think we did with the first four or five shifts in particular," said Canadian coach Clare Drake.

Eighteen women, including all three Canadian entrants, broke the Olympic speed skating record for 1,500 metres and the winner was Annie Borckink, a 28-year-old Netherlander whose time of 2:10.95 was more than five seconds faster than the former mark.

Among those they left behind were highly regarded Beth Heiden of the U.S., who was seventh, reigning world champion Natalia Petruseva, eighth, and top Canadian Sylvia Burka, 10th, just ahead of Brenda Webster of Regina. Kathy Vogt of Winnipeg was 16th.

Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., who has struggled on the international ski circuit since her victory in the giant slalom at the 1976 Olympics, posted the third-fastest time in the first training run for Sunday's women's downhill, topped only by two of the sports biggest stars, Anne-Marie Moser-Proell of Austria and Marie-Theres Nadig of Switzerland.

Laurie Graham of Inglewood, Ont., considered Canada's top downhiller, had the 11th-best time and Loni Klettl of Jasper, Alta., was 20th.

Barring accidents, which have been frequent in the competition, defending champion Detleff Guenther of East Germany and Vera Zozulya of the Soviet Union appeared headed for victory at the halfway mark of the luge singles as each chalked up a second consecutive victory.

The most notable gain among the Canadian lugers was a move to 15th from 23rd place by Bruce Smith of Mississauga, Ont., after his second run.

Podborski's run spiced with drama

By DAVID TUCKER

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (UPC) — Steve Podborski propelled Canada to the Olympic pedestal Thursday with a chilling textbook run over the Mount Whiteface course to capture the downhill bronze medal at the 1980 Winter Games.

Podborski cracked the traditional European dominance of the world's most glamorous ski race by becoming the first North American male ever to win an Olympic downhill medal.

The curly-haired, cherub-faced skier who has bubbled just below stardom in five years on the World Cup circuit, blazed through a shroud of wind-blown snow to master the 3,009-meter (1.7 miles) Whiteface Mountain course in a time of 1:46.62.

Leonard Stock, a 22-year-old Austrian who battled both obscurity and the animosity of his own teammates just to qualify for the games this week, roared to the gold medal in 1:45.50. Peter Wirnsberger, 23, also of Austria, took the silver with a time of 1:46.12.

"Stupendous," said Podborksi, a 22-year old Toronto skier who missed the last Olympics because of a series of injuries he suffered on the World Cup circuit.

"I am happy because I came here for a medal. To win one for Canada is the best thing that ever happened to me."

Podborski's heart-stopping run over the bumpy, rut-filled course was charged with a high drama that even he was not aware of until he reached the finish line.

When Podborski, who had drawn the 14th starting position, came to the starting post, Canada's medal hopes at the 1980 Games were threatening to all but vanish in mist.

Ken Read, winner of two World Cup races this season and a heavy pre-race favorite, lost his second and in all probability last chance for an Olympic medal when his ski bindings came loose 15 seconds into the race.

"I didn't know what had happened to Ken," said Podborski. "I wasn't aware of it at all and I am glad that no one told me. He (Read) is regarded as our best and you don't like those kind of omens when you are set for a big race."

Read, however, retained the grace that has made him one of the most popular skiers on the World Cup circuit.

"The bindings came undone and I just stepped out of my skis," said Read. "I want to see it on television, it was perfect," he grinned.

Dave Murray, 26, of Abbotsford, finished 10th in the downhill, while Dave Irwin, 26, of Vernon, who found the course too safe to be inspiring, finished 11th.

Podborski, perhaps the best technical skier in the Canada, flirted with disaster as he roared over snakelike turns on the upper course that had become doubly treacherous because of a heavy snowfall that began two hours before the race.

"The visibilty was terrible, and the course was bumpy and filed with ruts . . . plus the wind kept blowing the snow so that it was difficult to see where the difficult bumps were."

At Dynamite corner, where at about 70 mph skiers must traverse a tight bend that drops 33 degrees, Podborksi almost tumbled out of the race.

"You really get shaken up on the upper slopes. Because of the snow that has been falling every day you don't know what to expect. But I almost lost the race up there when I came hard around the turn and almost missed a gate."

But the stocky skier with oak-trunk legs held on.

"I gave up a little time there but I think I regained it on the lower slopes," he said. "That's not easy to do here but before the race we waxed our skis with the lower run in mind."

When his time was announced, Podborski, reeling from the more than 9,000-foot ride at speeds up to 90 mph, flashed a broad smile that still was visible almost an hour later.

"I don't really think it's hit me yet," he said after the bronze medal was drapped around his neck.

Americans delay verdict until April

Times News Services

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. — Officials of the U.S. Olympic Committee said Thursday that the committee would accept any request from President Carter for an American boycott of the Moscow Olympics, but that the USOC's formal decision will not be made until mid-April.

Robert J. Kane, the USOC president, said the decision rests with the House of Delegates, the USOC's policy-making body, and that group does not meet until April 11-13. Other officials said it would be difficult to schedule the meeting earlier or conduct a mail vote. May 24 is the deadline for accepting the invitation to Moscow.

Meanwhile, in London, the government will advise British athletes not to go to Moscow, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons.

Mrs. Thatcher said her Conservative government made the decision following the IOC's reaffirmation that the Games will not be moved from the Soviet capital.

TEARS OF JOY streaming down her face, Annie Berckink, the surprise Dutch winner of the Olympic 1,500 metre speed skating gold medal, is embraced by trainer Ab Krook after her victory Thursday. (AP wirephoto).

Even NHL's best can't save Kings

Times News Services

Even the reunion of the National Hockey League's most prolific forward line Thursday night wasn't enough to lift Los Angeles Kings out of their pauperly slump.

Dave Taylor, right winger on the line with Marcel Dionne and Charlie Simmer, returned to action against St. Louis Blues after missing 11 games because of a sprained knee. Taylor picked up three assists, Simmer picked up two goals and an assist and Dionne picked up an assist — but it was St. Louis that picked up the victory, 6-4, sending the Kings to their 10th defeat in the last 11 games.

"We played better than our last couple of games but not good enough," said Los Angeles coach Bob Berry. "We had an excellent effort but still made fundamental mistakes that cost us the game."

In other NHL games, Philadelphia Flyers dumped Winnipeg Jets 5-1, Montreal Canadiens beat Quebec Nordiques 5-1, Boston Bruins and Buffalo Sabres skated to a 3-3 tie and New York Islanders downed Colorado Rockies 5-3.

Only 6,886 fans were on hand at the Los Angeles Forum to watch the Kings take a 2-1 lead on two first-period goals by Simmer, his 38th and 39th of the season, sandwiched around Bernie Federko's first of two goals for the Blues.

But St. Louis, despite being outshot 30-23 over-all, connected for two goals against Kings goalie Ron Grahame in the second period and three more in the third to seal the victory.

Blair Chapman also scored twice for St. Louis while Jack Brownschidle and Tony Currie added singles.

Butch Goring and Randy Manery had the other Los Angeles goals.

Rookie goaltender Pete Peeters extended his unbeaten streak to 27 games — five short of Gerry Cheevers' NHL record — while Brian Propp and Paul Holmgren each scored twice to lead Philadelphia over Winnipeg at the Spectrum.

"Maybe I was hot tonight," said Montreal goalie Dennis Herron, who stopped 25 Quebec shots as the Canadiens took a 2-1 lead in the season series with their cross-province rivals.

"Everything started good," said Herron, who has displaced Michel Larocque as Montreal's No. 1 goaltender. "The first shot from (Robbie) Ftorek went right into my glove. That gave me confidence. I hope it'll continue."

Guy Lafleur had a goal and two assists. Pierre Mondou, Pierre Larouche, Doug Jarvis and Rick Chartraw also scored for the Canadiens.

Boston came from behind three times, culminating with Robert Miller's goal early in the third period, as the Bruins stayed within three points of Adams Division-leading Buffalo.

Also scoring for Boston were Peter McNab and Jean Ratelle, whose second-period goal — his 23rd this season — was his 1,219th point in 20 seasons, tying him with Jean Beliveau for seventh place on the all-time NHL scoring list.

Ric Seiling, Rick Martin and John Van Boxmeer scored for Buffalo.

Confident UVic squads sharing similar thoughts

Similar thoughts were running through the heads of both coaches and most of the players when the University of Victoria Vikings and Vikettes left this morning for Calgary.

The husband-and-wife coaching team of Ken and Kathy Shields both know they're in for tough contests but hope to win tonight's opening games against the University of Calgary Dinosaurs and Dinnies and thus carry off the titles in their respective men's and women's divisions of the Canada West Universities Association basketball league.

Both should do it. Both are unbeaten in Canada West play and lead their divisions comfortably.

"We're confident because we're playing really well right now," Kathy said before leaving for Calgary.

Vikettes have four games left. They have a Saturday rematch with the Dinnies and then play their last two home league games against UBC Thunderettes in McKinnon Gym Feb.22 and 23.

The women's national universities championships are at Halifax's Dalhousie University Mar. 5-7.

Vikings are flying high, too, right now after their first-ever win over Western Washington State University — a 92-80 decision in a Tuesday exhibition and need only one more win to wrap up the league title.

The Vikes, as well as the two games in Calgary and two the next weekend against UBC, also have two on Feb.29 and Mar. 1 in Saskatchewan.

If the Vikings win one more and take the league title, the Canada West playoffs will be at UVic Mar. 5-7 and the national championships will be played in Calgary starting Mar. 13.

Kathy Shields said her Vikettes are playing so well they should sew it all up tonight in the first game in Calgary.

"If we can keep on playing as well as we have, we should do it tonight," she said.

But husband Ken warned that the Dinosaurs are pretty tough on their home court.

"They've only lost once at home this season and they're tied for second with UBc," he pointed out. "So we know we're going to be in for a struggle."

Red Devil is back

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (CP) — The Red Devil returned to the Olympic Games figure skating judging panel today, confident she can erase two blemishes on her record.

Dr. Suzanne Morrow Francis of Toronto is one of nine judges in the ice dancing competition which began this afternoon.

She has been involved in two incidents over alleged biased judging in the Olympics and has twice been suspended for one year by the International Skating Union (ISU).

The first incident was at the 1964 Winter Olympics at Innsbruck, Austria, and 12 years later she was suspended after an incident at Innsbruck.

Francis's first suspension occurred after the 1966 world championships in Davos, Switzerland when she gave high marks to Canadian Don Knight.

Francis was nicknamed Roter Teufel (Red Devil) by the West Germans in 1964 after she judged the pairs competition. She drew the ire of the Germans when she placed crowd favorites Marika Kilius and Hans Jurgen Baumler of West Germany third behind Canadian champions Debbi Wilkes and Guy Revel, enabling Ludmilla Belousova and Oleg Protopopov of the Soviet Union to win the gold medal.

She was tagged with the Red Devil nickname because of the scarlet coat she wore through the Olympics that year.

Francis wore a black pansuit 12 years later at Innsbruck and was suspended for showing alleged nationalistic bias when she placed Canadian Toller Cranston ahead of John Curry of England in the men's free skating program.

Curry was the eventual winner.

Francis said she isn't nervous about the past.

"I'm looking forward to the dance event because it's a new challenge," she said. "I'm certainly not nervous because this is my fifth Olympics and I've also judged in five world championships."

Francis competed in two Olympics as Suzanne Morrow. She took a bronze medal in the pairs in 1948 with Wallace Deistelmeyer and was sixth as a single in 1952.

Blustery weather slows salmon fishing action

A northeasterly blew in Wednesday and stiffled fishing action around the southern end of Vancouver Island.

But, earlier in the week, some good returns were noted from a number of spots.

Archie Van Buskirk topped the catch at Sooke with an 18¾ pound chinook salmon taken Sunday on a green and white hootchie off Secretary Island. He was bumping the bottom at the time.

Other good catches were reported off The Bluffs and some of the catches were made on Squirts and bait.

Fraser Island and Bedford Island waters in Becher Bay have yielded chinooks from eight to 15 pounds on white hootchies trolled at the 40 to 50-foot depth.

Brian Waddell was the top fisherman at Pedder Bay with an 18-pounder landed Sunday on an anchovy off Christopher Point. He was using 80 to 90 feet of line on a downrigger.

Hootchies and Tyee strip are also producing with most of the return coming from waters between Race Passage and Church Rock.

The Gap, Trial Island and Chain Flats have yielded a few chinooks to 20 pounds to Tyee strip and 75 to 100 feet of line.

Sidney fishermen are finding a few chinooks to 14 pounds on bait from deep waters near Coal Island and the James Island wharf. Photographer Bill Halkett caught three in the area, the largest almost 10 pounds, so it has to be producing.

Nobody has been getting out at Deep Cove.

Strip and plugs are pulling in a few chinooks to 18 pounds from the 100-foot depth near Willis Point and Tod Inlet.

"Not bad" was the word from Finlayson Arm, although action has tapered off a little. Chinooks to 18 pounds, with most falling into the six-to-eight pound range, have been landed with most catches made on trolled hootchies and Squirts.

Steelhead anglers are reminded that a catch-and-release regulation is now in effect for all rivers and streams on Vancouver Island.

NIBBLES: Chinook Club members of the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association will hold their monthly Frostbite Derby from dawn to 2 p.m. Sunday.

Blacker the Fish — Better the Day for Fishing

Fuhr's rash has Cougars squirming

Victoria Cougars' bid to overhaul Portland Winter Hawks for the lead in the Western Hockey League's Western Division received a big boost but Thursday's good news has been tempered by some concern for goaltender Grant Fuhr.

First, the good. The Pat Ginnell-coached Medicine Hat Tigers, who face the Cougars in Memorial Arena Saturday, trotted out the scoring machine to upset the Hawks 11-5 in Portland.

The result held Portland three points ahead of Victoria but, more important, boosted Cougars' games-in-hand advantage over the Hawks to three.

Now, about Victoria coach Jack Shupe's concern. Fuhr, the 17-year-old rookie who has performed so brilliantly this season, is being treated for a skin rash that broke out earlier in the week.

Fuhr did not dress Tuesday, although he was written into the lineup as the backup netminder, when Cougars defeated Seattle Breakers 9-2 here.

It may not be serious, Shupe said, but still is a concern. Fuhr missed Victoria's practices earlier this week and the rash seems to be clearing up.

"Part of the problem Tuesday," said Shupe, "was Grant's reaction to an antibiotic. He had to have a second shot to counteract it."

Brad Kempthorne scored three goals and Brant Kiessig and Kevin Ginnell each tallied twice to power Medicine Hat to its surprisingly-easy victory in Portland.

So complete was the Tigers' domination that Tom McGillivray and Kiessig scored back-to-back short-handed goals 1:31 apart in the second period.

In Thursday's only other game, Brandon Wheat Kings scored a 5-2, home-ice victory over New Westminster to help Bruins tie the league's futility record. It was the Bruins' 16th straight loss, equalling a record set by Calgary Buffaloes in the 1966-67 season.

For seven, Frozen Assets worth a trip to the worlds

One of the biggest events on the dinghy racing circuit takes place at the Royal Victoria Yacht Club this weekend when Laser sailors from northern Oregon, Washington and British Columbia take part in the Frozen Assets Regatta.

The top six males and the top female from this regatta will represent the district at the world championships, to be held at Kingston, Ont. in late summer.

Wendy McBride, wife of Sidney sailmaker Rick McBride, stands a good chance of pulling off a win and a ticket to the worlds. Other local sailors expected to do well are Bob Britten and Rupert Holmes-Smith.

Carl Buchan of the Corinthian Yacht Club in Seattle will provide some tough competition. He is a past collegiate champion and an Olympic hopeful in Finns.

Between 60 and 70 boats are expected. Depending on the weather, there will be six or seven races. The first race starts at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Dinghy sailors of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will have series racing again on Sunday in Esquimalt Harbor. There will be around-the-buoys racing for both 420 and Laser sailors. The squadron's cruising class boats also will race at the same time.

Peter Holtham was top Laser sailor last Sunday, runners-up being Frank Towler and Olav Thyvold. Bill Sargent's Southern Comfort was over-all winner in the race for keel boats. After her came Fred Douglas' Vertu, Stewart Russell's Ithaqua and Ed Haines' Lotte.

The Canoe Bay Sailing Club will have its annual Canoe Rock Race on Sunday. The 14½-miler will begin at 9:30 a.m. in the vicinity of the government wharf at Sidney.

Ken Martin's Stirling Shamrock was over-all winner of the 6½-miler raced on Saturday. She was followed by Jim Morris' Madeleine, Gordie Inglis' Water Mellon, John Baker's Interlude, Don Wilson's Menehune, Roger Vale's Temenos, Cam Thomas' Cal-Lorri, Bill Stewart's Sea Quell, Tom Kersop's Saki and Ken McCullough's Vagrant.

RVYC will have another of its long-distance races on Sunday. The start time will be 10 a.m. near Flower Island at Cadboro Bay.

There were two around-the-buoys racing on Sunday. Soren Isbrand's Danish Pastry won the first race for larger Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet boats. Runners-up were Jack Foster's Sherlock and Ross Mathewson's Kotuku. Fleetwood, owned by Doug Hemphill and Dave Richardson, won the second race of the day, edging out Bruce Kenning's Arkle and Sherlock.

Barry Wilson's Harmony won the first sailout for the smaller PHRF boats, placing ahead of Eidas Stukas' Jan and Bruce Klaver's Wings. The second time around it was Wings, followed by Trevor Hayward's Merry and Ron Lindsay's Carson.

Denny Robinson's Coco won both races for Thunderbirds. Behind her in the first race were Larry Shorter's Kila Kila and Doug Taylor-Lee's Helios. She beat out Gary Cooney's Hocus and Helios for top honors in the last race of the day.

Gerry Porter's Lickety won the first race for Catalina 27s, being followed by Geoff Buck's Buckshot and Dan Syroid's Opo. In the second race it was Buckshot, followed by Lickety Split and Ron Jewula's Beowulf.

Members of the Victoria Canoe Club will have a run down the lower Cowichan River on Sunday, starting at the Bible Camp. They will meet at 9 a.m. in the Helmcken-Highway parking lot. Non-river runners will have a paddle around Beaver-Elk Lakes after meeting in the parking lot at the south end of Beaver Lake at 10:30 a.m.

There are still a few billets for the club's basic paddling course, to be held from 8 to 10 a.m. in the Crystal Garden on March 9, 16, 23 and 30. All you need is a lifejacket and paddle and $20 entrance fee. The Crystal Garden sessions will be followed by two in the outdoors. Contact Derek Bamforth at the Pacific Canoe Base to get on the list. The phone number is 382-1243.

The Victoria Power Squadron has lined up a short course for members who have A.M. radio-telephones or a V.H.F. radio aboard but no restricted radio operator's licence. They will give the course on Thursday at Spectrum School and the test will be given Feb. 28 at 7 p.m.

The Department of Communications has to know in advance who many people will take part. Those interested should phone Conny Yasey at 477-8751.

Oak Bay rink tied for lead

Times News Services

Defending champion Patti Jennings of North Vancouver and Lana Lacheur of Oak Bay lead the B.C. junior girls' curling championships with 4-1 records following play at Delta, Thursday.

Shelly MacFarlane of Prince George — after handing Jennings a 10-8 loss — could have joined the front runners, but lost 9-3 in eight ends to previously-winless Tracy Keizer of Powell River.

Lacheur's only loss was at the hands of Jennings, who drew to the four-foot ring with her last rock on the 10th end to take a 9-8 victory.

Joining MacFarlane with a 3-1 record is Carol Strueby of Chilliwack. Jennings' other win Thursday was an 8-3 victory over Joanne Christison of Fort St. John. Lacheur bounced back from her loss to Jennings to beat Sheril Patton of Cranbrook 6-5 and Keizer 9-2 in nine ends. Strueby beat Patton 11-8 Janet MacWilliam of Burnaby 8-5.

Winner will represent B.C. at the Canadian championships in Charlottetown, P.E.I., March 8-15.

The victory lifted Morriss into a tie with Sneakers who are also undefeated in two games in the double-knockout competition.

In high school girls' action, Lambrick Park couldn't seem to do anything right, scoring only 11 points in the first half and being able to add no more than two in the second on their way to a 64-13 drubbing at the hands of Victoria High Titans.

And in the night's other Greater Victoria senior high school league game, Parkland Panthers downed Spectrum 56-41.

Scoring was evenly spread amongst the Vic High players with Sylvia Butler getting 13 points and Sue Miles, Bridget Flynn and Marilyn Wilson adding 12 each.

Lisa McCullough did most of the damage for Parkland with 18 points.

Kevin Kennedy, John Entzminger, Ross Swanton, Dan Peck, Dale Ewasiuk and Ron Trafford were the scorers for Athletics. Brent Davis scored twice for the Buckaroos while Wayne Proceviat, Peter White and Norm Allen added the other Buck goals.

Sonics clip Denver

By The Associated Press

Marques Johnson and the rest of the Milwaukee Bucks are beginning to feel bullish despite what coach Don Nelson called their matador defence in the first half Thursday night.

The Bucks pulled away after the internmission for a 120-103 victory over the Warriors that left them just 2½ games behind first-place Kansas City in the National Basketball Association's Midwest Division.

In other games, Seattle SuperSonics defeated Denver Nuggets 93-84, New York Knicks nipped San Antonio Spurs 128-124, Indiana Pacers shaded Cleveland Cavaliers 118-114 and New Jersey Nets crushed Utah Jazz 137-96.

In winning its fifth consecutive game, Milwaukee was led by Johnson's 25 points, 20 by Junior Bridgeman and 14 apiece by Dave Meyers and Bob Lanier.

Johnson, finally recovered from a lingering cold and coming off two sub-par games after he bruised a hip, added 11 rebounds, seven assists, three steals and two blocked shots.

Guards Dennis Johnson and Gus Williams combined for 18 third-quarter points as Seattle recorded its seventh consecutive victory. The Sonics, who shot only 35 per cent in the first half and trailed 52-45, regained their touch in the third quarter and outscored the Nuggets 16-2 over the final six minutes.

Toby Knight and Ray Williams led a late New York rally. Knight scored 12 of his 32 points and Williams nine of his 24 in the last quarter. Bill Cartwright led the Knicks with 30 points as the lead switched hands 35 times and the score was tied on 29 occasions. George Gervin led the Spurs with 32.

Johnny Davis scored 22 points and James Edwards added 19, including a crucial tip-in with 30 seconds to play, as Indiana handed Cleveland its sixth loss in the last seven games. The Pacers jumped out to a 72-46 halftime lead.

Tucson start delayed

Times News Services

Rain washed out Thursday's opening round of the $300,000 Tucson Open golf tournament, with the golfers slated to try again today.

Play was halted after 20 groups — 66 golfers of the 144-man field — had teed off at the par 73 Tucson National Golf Club.

Professional Golfers Association officials said they would decide later whether there will be 36 holes played on Sunday or whether 18 holes will be added Monday.

Meanwhile, in Australia, American Ben Crenshaw, trying to outshine Johnny Miller, Arnold Palmer and Gary Player, grabbed a one-shot lead in the opening round of the Victorian Open at Melbourne.

Crenshaw fired a three-under 69 for a one-stroke lead over Australian pros Terry Gale and Lindsay Stephen and amateur Peter Sweeney.

NDP blasting 'cynical' Grits

By MARY JANIGAN
FP News Service

TORONTO — Federal Liberals now constitute the "most cynical party in Canadian history," says NDP leader Ed Broadbent.

He made the charge Thursday during a Winnipeg TV interview in reponse to allegations by Pierre Trudeau that the New Democrats have been reduced to recycling old Liberal policies in the run-up to Monday's general election.

Before leaving for the southern Ontario heartland where the NDP is battling a Tory — Liberal squeeze, Broadbent commented:

"They (the Liberals) have — since this campaign started — picked up our campaign slogans like 'made-in-Canada.' They talk about Ontario and Quebec being the industrial heartland. They want a made-in-Canada interest rate policy, a made-in-Canada oil policy — all the things we've been talking about for two years and they ignored precisely while they Broadbent acidly repeated his claim that only NDP insistence during the 1972-74 Liberal minority government forced Trudeau to create PetroCan in the first place.

Broadbent also pointed out that a Saskatchewan NDP government first created medicare and he attacked the Liberals for their 1977 legislative change which allowed the provinces to use federal medical- care funds for other purposes.

"The Liberals finally took it (medicare) up and they destroyed it. I mean we're now having problems with medicare all across Canada because two years ago Mr. Trudeau took away the federal leverage," he added.

"So for Mr. Trudeau to be making these claims is, to put it politely, ludicrous."

BLOWING KISSES is what Ed Broadbent appears to be doing with cupid and hearts floating overhead at a meeting hall in Thorold, Ont. Thursday.

Clark trying to shake image

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

ELECTION 80

TORONTO — Prime Minister Clark told a large, blue-chip crowd here Thursday that Canadian voters should judge his government on its record of management, rather than on its image.

Speaking to 1,200 members of the Empire Club, jammed into the largest room of the Royal York Hotel, the obviously tired leader said: "In this election, we've heard a lot about image. We've not heard much about management.

"But the government basically is management. I say to you without qualification that I am proud of the team of ministers I have built, proud of the priorities our government has established and proud of the thoroughness with which we have begun the basic changes we were elected to achieve."

After the speech, promoted extravagantly by Tory organizers as the climax of Clark's final week of the election campaign, an elegant, grandfatherly gent remained behind, reflecting sadly on the prime minister's speech:

"He's come a long way, our Joe," said the life-long Tory who asked not to be named. "But there's something missing. I don't know what it was, but I kept sitting on the edge of my chair waiting for something to happen and it never did."

Aides had hustled the weary Conservative leader off to bed early the night before the speech so he would be in top form for the occassion — designed both to capture the nightly TV news and to strengthen the party's shaky hold on at least some of the critical 23 seats in Metro Toronto before Monday's election.

Clark got a long, loud standing ovation from the audience. But the applause seemed somehow more respectful than spontaneous, the after-lunch comments seemed more like a nod of approval than a victory cry.

But Clark was saving his real fire for a mass rally of more than 3,000 Toronto Tories in suburban Etobicoke last night. It turned into the biggest, noisiest extravaganza of the campaign, complete with a dozen cabinet ministers, wagonloads of balloons and more screaming than at a rock concert.

Clark was at his animated best, still not a spell-binder, but spurred on by the crowd to new heights of slogaheering and Trudeau-bashing.

WINDSOR, Ont. — Liberal leader Pierre Trudeau says he will consider economic reprisals against U.S. auto firms if the companies and the American government do not move to reduce Canada's $3.1 billion deficit under the Canada-U.S. Auto Pact.

Speaking to an enthusiastic crowd of about 2,000 in this automotive capital, Trudeau said a Liberal government, if elected Monday, would open discussions with Washington aimed at redressing imbalances in the pact.

If such discussions were not successful in guaranteeing more automotive research and development in Canada, Trudeau said a government headed by him would withdraw U.S. manufacturers' right to make deductions from Canadian corporate tax for such activities carried out in the United States.

He said the big four U.S. auto makers intend to invest $75 billion between 1980 and 1985 on re-tooling for the fuel efficient car of the future.

"We want a fair share for Canada," he said. Canada, under a Liberal government, would demand a fair share of research and development in the auto parts sector as well as in assembly facilities.

The major American auto companies, said Trudeau, had done $375 million in research and development in the United States in 1977, and less than $5 million in Canada.

Pounding his hand on the podium and encouraged by the cheers of the crowd, He called that record "a disgrace," adding that "it must be changed." (Trudeau aides contacted by FP News Service were asked if the Liberal leader was suggesting renegotiation of the Auto Pact, and replied that "We're not going that far." Apparently the emphasis is on trying to make the U.S.live up to the terms of the agreement, rather than changing them.)

In turn, Trudeau promised incentives for the auto firms if they would do more research and development on the Canadian side of the border. These would take the form of guaranteed loans, for which preference would be given to small, Canadian-owned firms among the more than 400 auto parts manufacturers.

In addition, a special federal government division would be created to assist the industry to retool to meet requirements for more fuel-efficient autos.

Trudeau's rousing performance here came at the end of a day that started badly when a press bus drove into the chartered Liberal jet,damaging it. After that incident, at Winnipeg International Airport, the Trudeau troupe resumed its travels by commercial jet.

Letter carriers pact signed

'Bacon wrapper' still flies on high

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal government has signed a memorandum of agreement covering a new one-year contract with the Letter Carriers Union of Canada, Postmaster-General John Fraser said Thursday.

Fraser said it was the first time in the post office's collective bargaining history that the 19,800 letter carriers have reached agreement without third-party intervention.

The minister also said he is hopeful a settlement can be reached with the other major post office union, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, without a strike, but the jailing of CUPW president Jean-Claude Parrot is making that difficult.

The union "is in a tough spot" with Parrot serving a three-month jail sentence for defying Parliament's back-to-work order in 1978, Fraser said.

Union officials are still waiting to hear whether Parrot will receive a day pass to participate in concilliation board hearings aimed at reaching a settlement for the 23,000 inside workers.

Fraser said his personal relations with Parrot have always been good.

"He has always treated me with courtesy. When he recently had to accept his sentence he exhorted his union members not to demonstrate on the job. Not enough was made of that. That was a responsible act."

Fraser said he hoped Crown appeals against acquittals of regional union officers for their part in the 1978 strike will be dropped quickly.

Three more union leaders are scheduled to appear in court next week and a fourth has a court date the week after.

"It's very difficult for bargaining to take place against this kind of backdrop," he said. "I can't raise morale among the rank-and-file if everybody's being thrown in jail."

Details of the letter carriers' contract are being withheld until after a ratfication vote is held. Letter carriers now earn $7.30 an hour after two years service. Their previous contract expired Dec. 31.

Language law appeal

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec government is going back to the Supreme Court of Canada for another ruling on its controversial language law.

Justice Minister Marc-Andre Bedard said Thursday the government's interpretation of the court's initial ruling means all Quebec municipalities, school boards and other government bodies have to adopt and publish all their decisions in English as well as French — including those dating back to 1867.

Bedard, who said the cost of that would be "enormous," indicated the same interpretation should be applied to similar bodies in Manitoba.

The interpretation, released simultaneously Thursday, follows a Supreme Court decision in December overturning sections of the Quebec language law which restricted the use of English in the courts and legislature.

The court also overturned the Manitoba law making English the only official language of that province.

Bedard told reporters there were "slim indications" in the original decision that the court "did not intend to go as far" as the justice department interpretation.

Flag marks fifteenth birthday

OTTAWA (CP) — Once reviled as resembling an old bacon wrapper and scorned in Parliament as "this Pearson pennant," Canada's maple leaf flag — the only official banner the country has ever had — is 15 years old today.

The baby has survived after a most difficult birth.

Artists objected on esthetic grounds; patriots objected on historical grounds, and politicians objected on political grounds.

At one point, the uproar echoed across the border to the extent that the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin was moved to observe that "tinkering with a nation's flag is sort of like playing volleyball wuth a hornet's nest."

It was a good assessment, because a hornet's nest was exactly what Prime Minister Lester Pearson walked into in the spring of 1964 when he decided it was time to retire the old Red Ensign in favor of a uniquely Canadian symbol.

He ran headlong into the Royal Canadian Legion which wanted no change in the flag under which its members had gone to war. It was the opening shot in a battle that was to last nearly a year.

On Christmas Eve, Queen Elizabeth gave her approval. On Feb. 15, 1965, the flag was raised for the first time on Parliament Hill.

The Red Ensign, fondly remembered as the old red duster with the Union Jack in the dexter canton, had had a long run. It was created in 1707 and remains the national flag of British merchant ships. Its use in Canada was first authorized in 1892 under a British admiralty warrant. With a Canadian shield in the fly, it became the national flag of Canadian ships.

In 1924, it was approved for use on Canadian government buildings abroad, an approval extended to in-Canada use in 1945 pending formal government action to adopt a national flag of its own devising.

However, it didn't go quietly.

Apart from the Royal Canadian Legion, the Imperial Order, Daughters of the Empire was aghast and called for a vote of the people.

Rene delays byelections

QUEBEC (CP) — Premier Rene Levesque announced Thursday there will be no byelections in three vacant provincial ridings until after the spring referendum on sovereignty-association.

Levesque said he was delaying the byelections to avoid a conflict with the referendum campaign preceding the vote which has been promised for May or June.

MDs promote smokeless restaurants

B.C. doctors have launched a campaign to encourage restaurants to set aside areas for non-smokers.

The B.C. Medical Association has mailed letters to 6,000 restaurants and hotels.

Restaurants that qualify will receive framed awards from BCMA president Dr. Mel Petreman commending them for promoting a clean environment for its customers.

"Inhaling second-hand smoke makes the heart beat faster, the blood pressure go up, and increases the level of carbon monoxide in the blood," Petreman says.

"As doctors concerned with disease prevention as well as cure, we must take a leadership role in lowering the incidence of smoking-related emphysema, bronchitis, lung cancer and heart disease."

Petreman said a good place to start is in restaurants.

"We are encouraging the owners and managers to join with the medical profession in making the air we breath while eating as clean as possible."

The award reads: "The doctors of B.C. award this certificate to (name of restaurant) in recognition of its contribution to a healthier lifestyle in reserving a dining area for the benefit of these patrons who are non-smokers."

The BCMA's local medical societies throughout the province are participating in the campaign and will present the awards to restaurants in their cities.

Rent gougers face prosecution

Provincial rent review investigators are planning a crackdown on alleged rent gouging in the Vancouver area and checking out complaints of such activity in Victoria.

An investigation headed by Anthony Dibley, senior rentalsman's officer, has concentrated on about 12 key companies and individuals but touched on as many as 60 cases including complaints in Victoria and Nanaimo.

Dibley said in an interview today there are six or seven isolated complaints in the Victoria area.

"So far I don't have any direct evidence that this has taken place," he added.

In Vancouver, the investigators claim certain landowners have been gouging tenants with illegal rent increases as high as 60 per cent above the legal annual limit of seven per cent.

Rentalsman officers say they will ask the courts to force the landlords to repay money obtained through the increases and impose hefty fines for each month they collected the illegal rent.

Dibley said he has known for some time that landlords were overcharging but felt the situation became intolerable when landlords realized the potential windfall to be gained during a time of near-zero vacancy rates.

"More and more companies are coming to our attention," he said.

"The cases which have been brought to our attention are quite flagrant abuses of the act. No doubt the numbers will increase."

Dibley said rent gouging is done by only a small percentage of landlords and advised prospective tenants to check the former tenants' monthly rent before agreeing to the landlord's asking price.

He said the investigation has been going on for two weeks.

Actress Meryl Streep took one look at the burly Harvard student done up in petticoat, frills and a Shirley Temple wig and said: "I hope my son never turns out like this." Streep, star of the current motion picture hit Kramer vs. Kramer, was honored this week as Woman of the Year by Harvard's Hasty Pudding Theatricals, the oldest drama club in the United States. "It's nice to be back in New Haven," the former Yale drama student kidded her hosts, many who were dressed in women's clothes for their roles in Hasty Pudding's 132nd production, A Little Knife Music. Alan Alda will be honored next week as the club's Man of the Year.

Mike Douglas

He may have been dumped as host of a talk show after 18 years, but don't worry, fans, Mike Douglas will still be on television. He bought a new show. "We're going to continue doing the same show in the same way," Douglas says. "We're not going to change anything. The only change will be that it'll be my show. I own it. I have complete creative control over the show." Syndicast Services Inc. of New York will syndicate the talk show beginning July 1. Group W Productions, a division of Westinghouse Broadcasting, announced two weeks ago that Douglas will be replaced by entertainer John Davidson.when his contract expires at the end of June.

Shy men who consider themselves unattractive to women might learn from the exploits of a 27-year-old North Sumatrese man. Masib Nasution, who probably broke a world record by marrying 121 women over a six-year period, told a magazine: "I just blew the smoke of my cigarettes into the women's eyes, and they seemed to forget how ugly I was." Nasution confessed he was always very shy with women and was often rejected because of his ugliness until a witch came to him with the right advice. Nasution, persuaded that some magical power was linked to his cigarette's smoke, became a successful playboy and marrried 121 women in North Sumatra. Police authorities, who recently arrested him for violation of Moslem marriage law, apparently did not share his magical beliefs. They charged him with extortion of dowries and said his string of marriages were motivated by greed, not love.

Dear Abby:

What would you think of a daughter-in-law telling you at the dinner table that she thought you used too much toilet tissue? She said this right in front of her husband, my son!

I told her I would be happy to buy her some more toilet tissue if she was low on it, but she insisted she had plenty -- she just resented my extravagance!

This same daughter-in-law informed me shortly after her baby was born that I would have to telephone a week in advance for an appointment to see the baby.

I am not a difficult mother-in-law, Abby. I have another daughter-in-law with whom I get along beautifully.

I am so upset about the way I have been treated that I am considering selling my property and using the money to travel and enjoy myself instead of leaving everything to my two sons. I am a widow (only 56) and am considered quite well-to-do.

The other son (with the nice wife) says I should sell everything, travel, and live it up. The son with the dreadful wife says, "Don't sell. Keep it."

What should I do? If my husband were alive, he would leave nothing to the son with the terrible wife, since he never liked the girl. Your advice is needed.

No name, please

Dear No Name:

If it's necessary to sell your property in order to travel and live it up, sell it. Just keep enough to insure your security. (P.S. Widows would be wise to discuss financial matters with their banks, rather than with their children.)

Dear Abby:

Please do us lawyers a favor and publish this. I vowed that if one more "friend" called me at home for free legal advice, I'd write to Dear Abby!

The cheapskate who calls a lawyer at home asks if he has "a minute," and usually ends up talking half an hour. He calls us at home because he's afraid he'll get a bill if he calls the office. The cheapskate tries to make it sound like a "personal call" -- but he always wants some legal advice.

My free advice today is: "Do not call your lawyer at home except in a real emergency. Do call your lawyer's secretary for an appointment and expect to pay or the advice.

Legal Eagle

Dear Eagle:

You could cure your cheapskate callers quickly by billing them for legal advice dispensed from your home as well as from your office.

Dear Abby:

When a 17-year-old boy asks a girl to a school dance, how long should he be kept waiting for her answer?

His Mother

Dear Mother:

If he's been dangling for a week, he should consider himself cut down and free to ask another girl.

A reservoir of greatness

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The very immediacy, innovation and vitality of the present British Columbia art scene makes it imperative that we have the opportunity from time to time, to survey the recent past; to consider the styles, techniques, and imagery of the masters who were originators of major trends.

A reservoir of such art is not available to us on a regular basis. All the more welcome then, is the policy launched last year by Paul Kyle, of mounting an annual European Masters' exhibition.

The second such show will open in the newly renovated Kyle Gallery at 1545 Fort, Sunday at noon.

Drawings, watercolors and prints by important 19th and 20th century continental artists will be displayed in the exhibition which is to last through mid-March. The gallery will remain open for the Sunday preview until 10 p.m.

Original drawings by such artists as Pierre Bonnard, Edouard Vuillard, Giorgio Morandi, Camille Pissaro, Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec and Jean Baptiste Camille Corot reveal phases in the process of developing a particular image.

Techniques of line, shading, and massing of forms in the case of Bonnard and Vuillard, two turn-of-the-century French painters, show how through the deft handling of the pencil, expression and gesture can be transmitted to paper with remarkable vividness.

Through these drawings are to be seen the initial ideas and observations of the artists as they record impressions and develop motifs for subsequent paintings.

Contrasting the perceptively sympathetic portrayals of family and friends and home life generally, is the work of other French artists who turned their atteltion to observations of characters and events of the urban street life of their time.

Drawings by Toulouse-Lautrec, the late 19th century artist famous for his rendering of Parisian night clubs, dancers and musicians, record some of the faces and the condition of social outcasts, many of whom he numbered as friends.

A watercolor sketch made by another French artist, Jules Pascin, during his sojourn on the east coast of the United States between 1914 and 1920, wryly illuminates a crowd of people in the teaming streets of New Orleans.

Works by artists of the Fauvre movement, which pioneered a palette of strong intense color during the early years of this century, are included in the collection.

Two distinctive gouache paintings of animals in a boldly decorative treatment by Andre Derain, are hung along with tempera textile designs and compositional studies by fellow Fauvre artist, Sonia Delauney. These illustrate her simplified forms and ornamental use of color as geometry in painting.

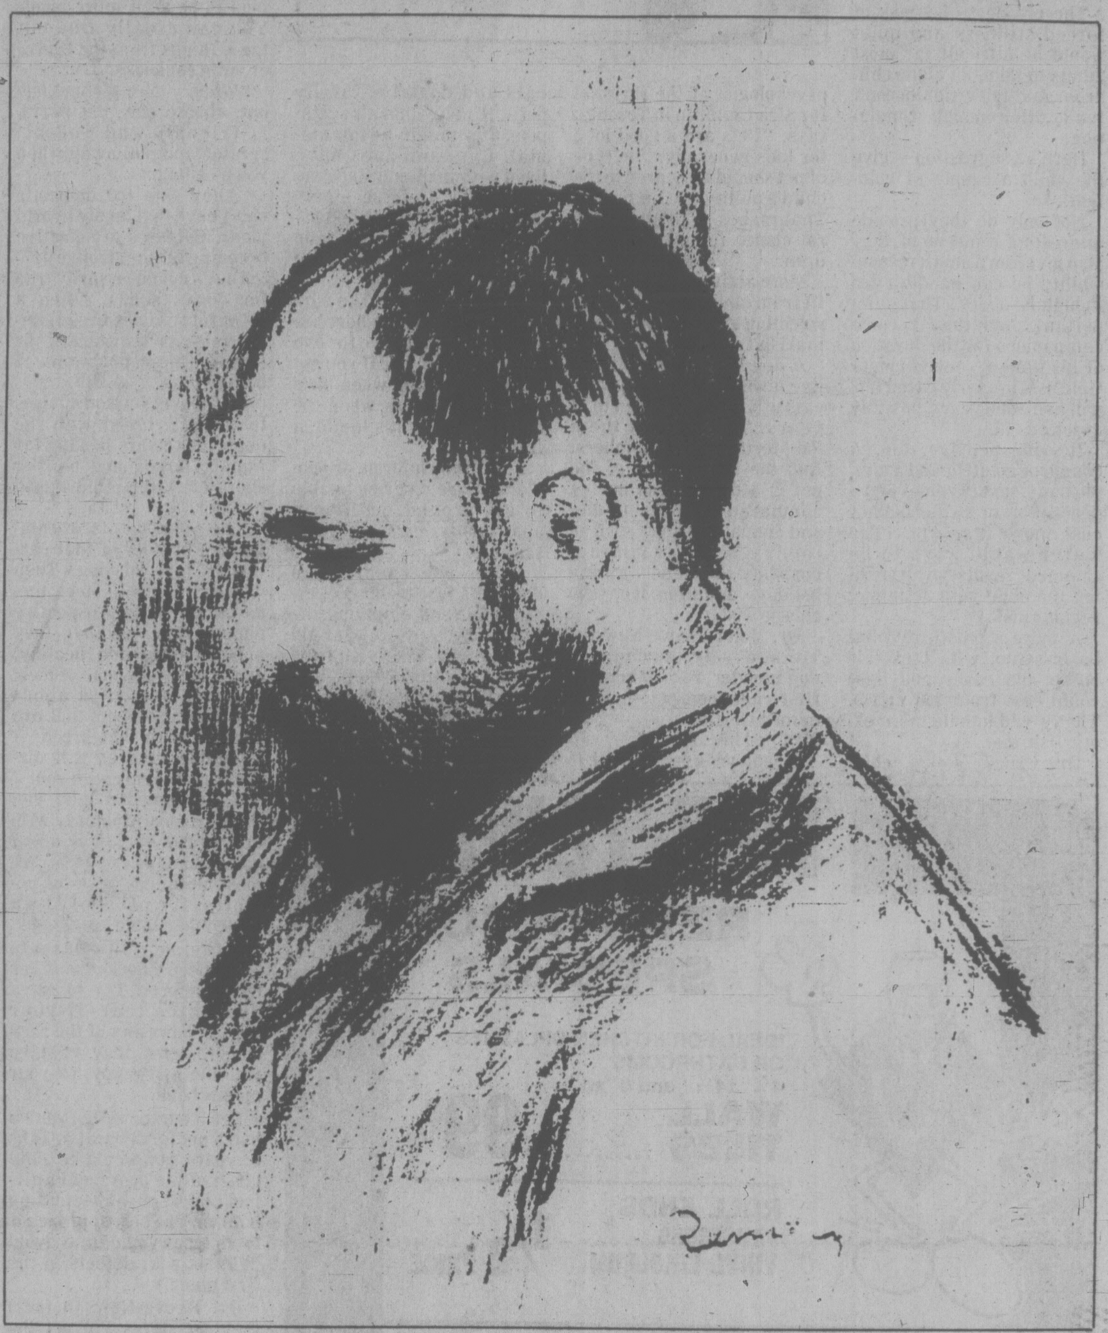
Among the watercolors are a semi-abstract landscape by Swiss artist Paul Klee and a landscape scene in muted tones by Edouard Vuillard which contrasts strikingly with the brilliant color and playful improvisations of Raoul Dufy.

From them one may turn to the sombre, faceted applications of color in the work of A. de la Patelliere and the light wash drawings of Pascin. Each work shows within the medium, a different approach to color, composition and line.

An outstanding example of contemporary book decoration is to be found in a pastel illustration for Lewis Carroll's The Hunting of the Snark. It is dated 1968 and is by the French Dada artist, Max Ernst, a leading exponent of the surreal movement which originated in Germany after the First World War.

Of particular interest is a pencil drawing by the Italian artist Giorgio Morandi whose work is rarely seen in this part of the world. It is a delicate study of objects on a table and was at one time in the collection of the Guggenheim Art Museum in New York.

Works from the 19th century included in the exhibition present many arresting and charming features.



Renoir's 'Portrait of Vollard' is one of many masterworks to be displayed Sunday

Among them is a lovely pencil drawing by Corot of figures in a landscape bordered by tall trees executed with a dream-like delicacy.

One of the most beautifully understated but vibrant portraits is a lithograph depicting the famous art dealer Ambroise Vollard, by the Impressionist painter Renoir.

Two etchings by Pablo Picasso, one from his pre-Cubist period and another done near the end of his life, a lino cut by Henri Matisse and original lithographs by Chagall and Dufy complete the selection of prints by 20th century masters.

This exceptional show can be seen any day except Monday between the hours of 10 a.m. and 6 p.m., and Wednesday through Friday from 7:30 to 10 p.m.

On the third floor, work of the Kyle Gallery's own stable of contemporary West Coast artists will be on display. Also some works by important Canadian artists such as A.Y. Jackson and David Milne will be available to view on request.

Native art on exhibit in Scotland

The riches of west coast Indian culture will travel overseas this summer, to be sampled by the thousands of people who annually visit the Edinburgh Festival.

An exhibition being prepared by the staff of the Provincial Museum's Ethnology Division, will form the major art showing — one of six events from Canada — in the world's most famous festival.

The exhibition is to include some 100 pieces from the Museum's collection, of which about 70 are contemporary works. Such things as a free form 24 carat gold box by Bill Reid; carvings by Henry Hunt and his sons, Richard and Tony; works in gold, silver and argillite; a variety of objects carved and crafted from wood, such as boxes, dishes and spoons and mountain goat horn spoons are among the objects.

The exhibition is both comprehensive and didactic, according to ethnology curator Peter Macnair. It contains some of the best historic examples from the collection including work by the late Mungo Martin, Charles Edensaw and Willie Seaweed.

A fully illustrated catalogue is to accompany the exhibition. Hopfully if money is available the show will also be seen in Canada.

The Art Gallery of Greater Victoria is looking to its members and friends to assist in providing it with one of the three most important public collections of British ceramics in Canada.

A collection of English delftware, except for 10 pieces the possession of J.E, Horvath of Vancouver; was exhibited at the gallery last fall. During the exhibition Horvath decided to offer the collection to the Gallery for $35,000, an enormous bargain considering that, according to both Sotheby's and Christie's of London, the collection would fetch at auction, between $50,000 and $80,000.

A grant of one half the purchase price, $17,500, from the B.C. Lotteries Fund was obtained on the understanding that the Gallery would raise an equal amount privately to secure the collection.

To realize this amount the proposition is that any person interested may purchase a piece for the Gallery at less than half its value; for example a dish valued at $1,300 last year can be given to the Gallery with a donation of $500; or a 'posset pot' valued at $625 can be given with a $250 donation.

Actually, more than half of the 120 pieces can be given with donations of $60 to $160. All donations in any amount are tax deductible and each gift will be acknowledged on exhibition labels, as well as in a revised edition of the exhibition catalogue.

An artist cannot be totally an environmentalist according to painter Joe Plaskett. An exhibition of his work that opens Tuesday at the Backroom Gallery, 2070 Oak Bay, consists of 'Romantic Impressions' in pastel, of places as far away as Paris and Mexico and as nearby as the B.C. interior and New Westminster.

Of the New Westminster works (done in 1967-68 from a studio overlooking the harbor) Plaskett writes: "Art has little to do with morality, progress or social welfare. The artist finds beauty in pollution.

"Monet said 'What I love more than anything in London is the fog.' London with clean air no longer has that fog or that beauty . . . Nature needs the obstruction of architecture, the foil of human life, and the darker drama of industrial power."

Campaign on to reduce X-ray tests

By Dr. L. L. COLEMAN

I am one of those who believe that these days we are exposed to many unnecessary X-ray tests. Recently, our doctor ordered a chest X-ray on our 5-year-old daughter. When I refused, he became angry with me and said that he could not continue to treat her if I refused to follow his instructions. Do you agree with me that too many X-rays are dangerous, especially for a child?

Mrs. T.N.N.

Dear Mrs. N.:

There are two distinct aspects of your letter that deserve discussion. The first is the problem of over-use of X-rays. It is true that there now is a very active and aggressive campaign to reduce the frequencey of X-ray exposure in young children.

Dr. John Leonidas, of the Boston Floating Hospital for Infants and Children says, "Up to 75 per cent of radiation that children receive from diagnostic X-rays may be unnecessary. Some indications suggest that radiated children may pass on a higher risk of cancer, genetic damage and birth defects to future offspring."

Although he grants that the dangers of diagnostic radiation are only speculative, newer techniques are being devised to reduce X-ray exposure.

Dr. Leonidas believes that "up to the age of 20, a thorough medical history and a good physical examination are sufficient to determine which patients need diagnostic X-ray." This concept is not far removed from the attitude of most doctors in America. Nevertheless, unnecessary diagnostic X-rays are still promiscuously made by some less-discerning physicians.

And here lies the answer to the second part of your letter. The relationship that you have with your child's doctor is significant to her development and her health. It is a valuable relationship that involves trust and faith in his decisions. It should not be disrupted by your arbitrary opinion.

A free expression of your fears and anxiety about X-ray exposure should not call forth "anger" or hostility. You deserve the additional assurance that you obviously need, to satisfy yourself that the X-ray that your doctor plans is vital to your child's health.

Dear Doctor:

Can you tell me what "walking pneumonia" is?

Miss E.E.

Dear Miss E.:

No, I can't. I know what pneumonia is, but I do not know what "walking" pneumonia is, nor where the term originated. I can only speculate that this strange type of "pneumonia" probably describes someone who is still able to stand on his feet and function before the diagnosis has been made.

Cure those sickroom blues with a bowlful of goldfish

joan watson
for consumers

If you've ever had a child at home, sick in bed, for more than a few days, you know how bored and frustrated he can get. Being confined to one room can be a very lonely experience.

The prospect of weeks of forced stillness and quiet would be difficult for most adults to take, let alone children. And television doesn't really offer enough stimulation.

Here's a suggestion — give the child a couple of goldfish.

Not only do they provide interesting amusement, they also give him a small responsibility he can handle even though he's sick. That's important. And they become companions for the duration of his illness — even longer Goldfish, properly cared for, will live 5 or 6 years, possibly as long as 15.

It's inexpensive, too. A couple of goldfish and a simple bowl, some pebbles and a decoration or two shouldn't cost more than $10. (The water would have to be changed regularly, providing the child with a simple, regular task.)

A more sophisticated but basic setup, with tank, air pump and cover and light could cost from $50 to $70. That would handle more exotic fish, too.

Dr. Chuck Netley, chief psychologist at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, says, "Pets are a good idea for kids generally. The type of pet should be geared to the child's ability to care for it." That makes goldfish a natural choice for inactive children.

More active kids can benefit from having pets, too. But selecting an appropriate animal isn't always easy.

A dog can be expected to live about seven to 14 years; cats usually live 14 teen to 17 years. That makes them long-term family members. And the initial price of the pet is a drop in the bucket compared with day-to-day and annual expenses such as food, shots, grooming, boarding at kennels during holidays, and so on. It pays to choose wisely.

Dr. John Reeve-Newson, Toronto veterinarian and dog breeder, remembers his first childhood pet — a cat named Gertie.

"I just loved her."

He suggests people stick to cats and dogs for family pets. "I'm against all exotic pets. It's unfair to the animal. Cats and dogs have lived with mankind since the Stone Age. If these others had been suitable for domestication, they would have been domesticated long ago."

Gerbils and mice, he notes, have a very short life span. "They only live for two or three years, and if you get one for a child when he's seven, and it dies when the child is nine, it's quite a trauma."

For small children, or people who are older or unable to get around, or live in apartments, cats are most suitable.

"Cats are easier than dogs. It's just feeding it, essentially, and emptying the litter tray. Any six-year-old can do that. There isn't the need to exercise them that there is with dogs."

The best way to choose a cat? "Check the listing board at your supermarket, or find a friend whose cat has had kittens . . . they don't usually suffer from temperament problems. Unless you get a more exotic breed. Siamese meow all the time and Persian cats tend to be a bit more aloof. You can usually find out these things from the breeder, or in cat books.

"When you're picking one out, choose one that purrs, is friendly and doesn't scratch and pull away when you pick it up.

"Alley cats (or domestic cats) have that lovely hybrid vigor. Centures of selective breeding for the strongest."

That's not necessarily true for dogs, though. Often a mongrel or mixed breed simply inherits the genetic or temperament problems of both parents.

Dr. Reeve-Newson advises to select a breed with the qualities you are looking for (small, large, long hair or short, etc.), then find a good breeder.

Ask your vet to recommend a breeder of that particular type of dog. Then visit the kennel. Meet the parents of your prospective puppy. Note whether they appear lively and healthy, and take special note of their temperament. Ask about any genetic defects that are possible with that breed. A reputable breeder will discuss them openly with you.

If the breeder tells you there are no problems with that type of dog, think about going somewhere else. Almost all breeds have the potential for passing along some inheritable problems.

Make sure the parents have been checked out for these defects. Try to get a guarantee that, if your puppy shows any of the serious problems, they will give you another puppy, or your money back.

(Of course, once you've had a pet for several months or years, you would be quite upset at the prospect of giving it back, or worse, putting it down. The best approach is to do what you can to avoid animals with defects in the first place.)

Dr. Reeve-Newson feels that pet stores are not the best sources for pets. "For a dog, why buy it from a pet store and go through a middleman? Go directly to the guy that produced it. And it's the same thing with cats.

"Also, many cat and dog diseases are infectious. So in places where there are lots of animals, the likelihood of disease is greater." With young kittens and puppies, "It's like kids at nursery school. If there's anything around, they get it."

For most of these infectious diseases, the incubation period is about a week. So you could have the animal home for a week before the disease shows up.

"Pet stores tend to encourage impulse buying, too, which I think is wrong," says Dr. Reeve-Newson. "You walk by and you think, 'Isn't it cute, I've got to have it.' "

But you will have the animal for years, and there will be problems and inconveniences. And the expense doesn't end with the purchase price. Buying a pet is a decision you should weigh very carefully. Do you really want one?

If the answer is yes, invest enough time to ensure you'll be happy with your choice. You'll know you've done well if that grin on your child's face when he first takes the pet home is still there when they're playing years later.

Vegetable oil or mayonnaise stains may be practically invisible soon after they spill onto a garment, so you hang it back in the closet. But the next time you take the garment off the hanger, a yellowish stain reminds you of the spill. Remember that new stains can usually be removed with drycleaning or laundering; old stains can be almost impossible to remove.

youth clinic

Dear Mr. Vichert: I am an 18-year-old male with an unsual problem. I have a fair bit of imagination but I can't think of places to take girls on dates. This is one of the reasons I find it difficult to ask girls out. When I ask my friends, they give me joke answers. Could you please publish a list of 10 or more places to go on a date.

You'd really help me and others out there who are stuck in this rut.

Answer: One thing to do when you want to ask a girl out is to first think of going to places that have a special interest for you. If you are particularly interested in astrology then a date to the planetarium could be interesting. If you do something that you are interested in, or know something about, then it will help you with conversation and also let the girl know you are a person who has interests and is able to share them.

So go through a list of things that interest you and then plan the date.

Remember one of the points about dating is to get to know each other better.

If you have never rollerskated, or bowled, or cross-country skied; you might suggest that kind of an activity. If she doesn't know how, or hasn't done it before before then you can both learn together. That can be a lot of fund. Or you might try something completely different to your tastes to see what happens.

If you like only popular music, then suggest a concert date. Then you can talk about whther or not it is something you enjoyed and might like to do again. If you like the girl and want to share a number of dates why not suggest taking a course together such as photography, self-defense, or anything else that appeals to you? Then you will be assured of a number of dates. I hope this begins to stimulate your imagination and you can plan a good date for yourself.

Dear Dr. Cotter: I'm a 16-year-old girl and pregnant and confused. My boyfriend is 23 years old. I want to keep my baby but am not sure my boyfriend wants to help us. He says he's going to get a job and a house so we can settle down. But so far he's been drinking and saying things such as 'It's your fault, you got pregnant, and I don't want anything to do with you anymore'. And he makes threats to leave me.

He says he cares but I don't know if he does. I love him very much and I need him now more than ever before. I would get a job but my doctor says I am too weak to work. I'm not sure if my boyfriend wants either me or the baby.

Answer: Your first concern is now the baby and your own health, so you must take steps at once to ensure your support both before and after the baby's birth. Your boyfriend needs to be forced to see his responsibility and accept at least the financial burden. It is no use marrying him because the marriage would not be likely to last.

Therfore, you must find help from the Children's Aid Society or the provincial child welfare department, wherever you are. Trained workers will tell you your rights and counsel you about how you can manage. Do not rely on the boyfriend, however much you love him, but get a third party with knowledge and authority to assit you.

Dear Dr. Powell: I am a 13-year-old girl and have not yet had my period. Lately I have noticed a gooey white discharge. Can you tell me what this is and what I can do.

Answer: This substance which you have noticed is a normal secretion from the membrane which lines the vagina and cervix or neck of the uterus. It is composed of moisture and mucus that is sticky and may be clear or white. It is a sign that your genital organs are maturing and your menstrual periods will likely start fairly soon.

There is nothing you can do to stop this secretion or discharge.

Dear Dr. Levine: I'm a 14-year-old girl and I'm dating a 15-year-old guy. I'm considered popular at school and by people in the various activities I join.

My problem is that when I start liking a guy, I really like him and can't wait to start a relationship. But when it gets started (like it is now) I start to prefer someone else. I always feel I've reached one goal and want to try for another.

Answer: You are describing the enjoyment of the challenge, the thrill of the battle, but once victory is yours, you have to go on to "Bigger and better". This might be because you savor excitement and the struggle to overcome obstacles. But conquest bores you, because around the corner there may be a greater challenge.

Another way of looking at it is in terms of your need to convince yourself that you are attractive, desirable and worthwhile.

Look at yourself in the mirror. What do you really want? What will really convince you that you're worthwhile? What kind of guy is your "ideal" boyfriend? You have a lot going for you — achievement, friends, and interests. Surely you don't have to play with the affections of others to make you feel good.

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel including Marion Powell, physician; Graham Cotter, clergyman; Dr. Saul Levine, psychiatrist, and social worker Bruce Vichert.

Some children in the 3 to 5 age group are in nursery school. May have brothers and sisters and friends who come to visit them, so they need toys that several children can play with together. Others need toys to play with alone. Here are some tips for buying toys for 3 to 5 year olds:

If possible, watch children of that age to find out what their interests and abilities are. You might even talk to someone at a nursery school to fine out what their children play with.

Look on toy containers for the recommended age range, and use your common sense.

Do not buy any plug-in electrical toys for children of this age.

Check before you buy to make sure the toy has all its parts and does what it is supposed to do.

Death upsetting for long-time soap opera fans

WINNIPEG (CP) — Some people may not care if Janice is poisoning Mac in Another World, or if Nicky of the Young and the Restless turns to a life of crime.

On the other hand, there are those who would be very unhappy if Donna and Chuck broke up on the set of All My Children, or if Roger — heaven help us — kidnapped Christina on The Guiding Light.

The people who care about these dire possibilities are fans of the television soap opera.

Darlene Kanski, 19, a creative communications student at Red River Community College in Winnipeg has been watching General Hospital for eight years.

She said she is so attached to the characters on the show she gets upset when one of them is "killed."

"Yes, very much so," said Kanski, "especially characters I really like."

If her favorite, Rick, died in real life, she would try to get to the funeral. "If he died on the show, I'd wear black," she said.

Even the replacement of a familiar actor with a new one is upsetting. "I can't handle it. I just have a certain picture of how they're supposed to look."

Tony Mariani, 19, has been watching Another World for three years — ever since his mother got him hooked. "She's a junkie, you could say." She cried when her long-time favorite, John Randolph, died.

Tony said some people think the fact he's a devotee is "sort of sucky or something like that." But he doesn't care.

He's following the story of murderous Janice and innocent Mac. "I couldn't stop watching now — it's at a high point."

But if it happens that he does miss an episode, he turns on Winnipeg radio station CFRW the next morning and listens to disc jockey Dick Reeves' five-minute rundown of what happened the afternoon before.

Reeves got started "for a lark and the next day the phones started ringing.

"It's a service, not a feature," said Reeves. "I don't want to stop it. It's increased my audience."

Despite this sort of popularity, sociologists and psychiatrists have been critical of the effects of soap operas since the days they first wafted into homes via radio waves.

volunteering

The old notion of volunteerism as the pursuit of only middle-aged, middle-class women is no longer applicable. Men will find that volunteer work provides many opportunities for the advancement of a personal hobby, skill or interest. Volunteer work can be a valuable training ground for students or those who have recently entered the labour force. It can help to reduce the stress experienced by many men upon retirement, by making use of their expertise and judgement. For men caught up in the whirl of the daily work place, volunteering can provide a few hours of relaxation, enjoying a common interest with others who need their companionship.

The world of paid work is not the only option in the search for meaningful activity. There are many volunteer programs that need the active participation of men.

Some of these programs are:

A project designed to help problem youths needs volunteers who are familiar with motor bikes. The volunteer would be counselling youths with behavioural problems, and teaching the use and handling of motor bikes.

An association that works with mentally handicapped young people is interested in hearing from retired gentlemen with experience as carpenters, cabinet makers, or woodworkers. Hobbyists are also welcome.

A local group that provides recreation for handicapped people needs a male volunteer to work with a small group of mentally handicapped boys in a swim class. The volunteer will help the boys in the change rooms and with swimming. The class takes place at the Peninsula Recreation Centre on Saturday mornings.

A society whose aim is to involve the community in the area of criminal justice needs volunteers to join its prison group visitor program. There is a special need for male volunteers. The program takes place at William Head Institution every Wednesday evening for two hours.

An association dedicated to providing care for the dying needs volunteers, but right now has a special need for men willing to work with terminally ill people and their relatives. Volunteers should be understanding and able to develop supportive relationships. They must be able to talk about death and related concerns with patients while respecting their beliefs. A training program will be provided.

A municipal recreation centre needs volunteers to plan and organize a program for boys and girls aged 12 to 15 years. Its purpose is to involve the youths in recreation and other constructive activities.

These are only a few positions of interest to men.

For further information contact the Bureau at 386-2269 between 8:30 to 4:30 Monday to Friday.

Crime boss dies as porno stung

By ALLAN FRANK
Washington Star Service

WASHINGTON — The reputed organized crime leader of the nation's multi-million pornography business, Michael "Mickey" Zaffarano, died of a heart attack Thursday in New York as FBI agents were trying to arrest him and 53 other persons indicted in a nationwide anti-pornography "sting."

Zaffarano, 57, was said by law enforcement officials to be the organized crime figure who conspired with other organized crime affiliates to control pornography manufacture and distribution and the bootleg videotape industry.

The 2½-year FBI operation, code-named "Miporn," was based in Miami, where two undercover agents established two mail-order pornography concerns, Golde Coaste Specialties Inc. and G£C Sales Inc.

The two companies bought hundreds of pornographic films, books, magazines and videotapes from organized crime-controlled enterprises.

FBI Director William H. Webster estimates that pornography is a $4-billion-a-year business.

According to details of the 45-page indictment, undercover agents attended meetings of organized crime figures, led by Zaffarano and others, in Las Vegas, Colorado Springs, Seattle and Miami, at which prices were fixed, sales boundaries settled, "watch lists" of suspected government undercover agents exchanged and control of the business emphasized by threats and force.

One law enforcement official who has investigated organized crime for more than a decade said of the FBI operation, "If you named the top 10 'wise guys' (organized crime figures) in pornography, they got them all yesterday, except for Michael Thevis (of Atlanta), and he's already in jail for murdering a witness."

The first indictment charged 45 persons with interstate transportation of obscene material, a crime that carries a penalty of five years in jail and a $5,000 fine. Other indictments returned by the Miami federal grand jury named 13 persons, including four named in the first indictment, and charged them with pirating Hollywood movies for illegal videotapes and racketeering.

Walt Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" as well as "The Godfather" and "Godfather II', were among the 50 films copied illegally at a loss of $700 million annually to the movie industry, the FBI said.

A Washington Star series on pornography in 1978 first publicly identified Zaffarano as the top Cosa Nostra leader in charge of the pornography business nationally.

One confidential report obtained by The Star said, "Although La Cosa Nostra does not physically oversee the majority of the pornography business in the United States, it is apparent that there are 'agreements' with those involved in the pornography business in allowing these people to operate independently by paying off members of organized crime for the privilege of being allowed to operate."

Zaffarano, reputedly a captain in the Bonanno organized crime family, died in his Times Square headquarters office on 49th Street.

U.K. inflation roars to 18.4%

LONDON (AP) — Inflation in Britain soared 2.5 per cent in January to an annual rate of 18.4 per cent, the highest since April, 1976, the government announced today.

This is the highest rate of inflation among major Western countries except for Italy, where the cost of living is going up at the rate of 18.8 per cent a year.

Although government action led to many of January's increases — higher interest rates, transport costs and telephone charges — employment department officials say the main cause of the new year price surge was hefty wage settlements.

Nevertheless, officials said one-third of the increase was due to a jump in mortgage interest rates to 15 per cent from 11¾ per cent.

More Soviets expelled

PARIS (Reuter) — A senior Soviet consular official in Marseilles has been expelled for alleged expionage, the interior ministry announced today.

Soviet consular official Gennadu Travkov was caught in a Marseilles suburb with a briefcase full of French national defence documents, the ministry added. He left for Moscow last Saturday.

Government counter-espionage agents said Travkov was interested in France's new combat aircraft Mirage 2000 and fleet movements in the Mediterranean.

Four French citizens involved in the spy ring have also been arrested and sent to the state security court for trial, the interior ministry said.

Meanwhile, in Madrid, Oleg Suranov, the director of the Spanish office of the Soviet national airline, Aeroflot, was arrested Thursday on espionage charges and ordered deported immediately.

Suranov was the fifth Russian accused of spying since Spain and the Soviet Union re-established diplomatic relations Feb. 10, 1977.

Oil firm coughs $700M

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — Standard Oil of Indiana, in the largest settlement of its kind to date, agreed Thursday to payments totalling almost $700 million for violating U.S. government pricing regulations.

The largest part of the settlement, $410 million, will be used to search for more domestic petroleum and to upgrade refining facilities. The remainder will be refunded to customers or be used to offset future price increases.

The consent agreement, to which the company neither admitted or denied guilt, is part of a continuing audit of U.S. oil companies by the U.S. energy department.

CIA arms-funnel from Pakistan, paper reports

Times News Services

The U.S. Central Intelligence Agency is reported to have opened a secret supply line to funnel small arms and anti-tank weapons across the Pakistani border to the Moslem rebels battling Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

Meanwhile, Soviet military control in and around the Afghan capital of Kabul reportedly was slipping in the face of stepped-up Moslem rebel resistance.

Today's editions of The Washington Post quote unidentified sources as saying the United States started supplying weapons to the anti-Communist rebels after the Soviet Union began pouring an estimated 90,000 troops into Afghanistan on Christmas Day.

Before the Soviet military intervention, the United States secretly supplied the rebels with small amounts of medicine and communications equipment, the paper says.

The Post claims the weapons being sent to the rebels are manufactured by the Soviet Union. This presumably means they are being drawn from the stockpiles of military hardware captured by the U.S. during the Vietnam war.

There has been no official confirmation of the Post's disclosures, which come one day after Egypt, the closest Arab supporter of the U.S. in the Middle East, revealed that it is training Afghan rebels and will arm them before sending them home to fight Soviet troops.

The Soviet Union has repeatedly condemned the United States, Egypt, Pakistan and China for arming and aiding the Afghan guerrillas fighting a 21-month war against a series of Communist governments in their homeland.

With the rebellion showing no signs of let up, the Kremlin sent in its own forces last December to battle the guerrillas and prop up Babrak Karmal, the Afghan ruler installed in a Soviet-engineered coup on Dec. 27.

The Carter administration has called for a boycott of the summer Olympic games in Moscow unless the Russians withdraw their forces by next Wednesday.

The U.S. Olympic Committee (USOC) said Thursday that it will "accept any decision . . . the president makes" about a possible boycott.

In Strasbourg today, the European parliament jumped on the Olympic boycott bandwagon by urging the Games be held on "agreed international territory" and caffed for the nine Common Market country governments to urge athletes not to take part in the Games. It also called for an immediate embargo on sales of surplus commodities to the Soviet Union, and condemned the recent banishment of Soviet dissident Andrei Sakharov to Gorky.

On the military front, Soviet tanks and at least one MiG-23 fighter bomber battled what was believed to be a rebellious Afghan army unit near Kabul earlier this week, witnesses said.

The delayed report, received from Kabul Thursday, quoted witnesses as saying the Soviet bomber dropped napalm on the rebellious garrison, about 18 kilometres north of Kabul, injuring an undetermined number of people.

Sources said rebel forces were operating freely in areas outside the city.

El Salvador leftists hold 500 hostage

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Leftists seeking control of El Salvador have seized a bank in the capital of San Salvador and local radio stations say they are holding at least 500 hostages.

The militants who took over the Agricultural Development Bank late Thursday afternoon have identified themselves as members of the Popular Revoluntionary Bloc, El Salvador's largest leftist alliance.

They are demanding better loan rates for small farmers.

Witnesses said the occupation has been peaceful. Reporters, often invited into occupied buildings in the past, have been barred from the bank and there has been no official confirmation of the hostage count. Nor is there any indication how many leftists are involved in the takeover or if they are armed.

Members of the bloc have occupied the offices of the water and sewer administration in the capital since Wednesday, demanding better services for the poor.

A second major leftist group, the Popular Leagues of Feb. 28, or LP-28, ended its two-day occupation of the Panamanian Embassy on Thursday but continues its 11-day-old takeover of the Spanish Embassy.

Panamanian Ambassador David Perez Ramos and two other hostages were freed unharmed after the government released 23 people in response to the group's demands. At a news conference after his release, the ambassador said the takeover was more "a form of dialogue" than an occupation.

While the leftist power struggle in the cities remains generally peaceful, there was violence in the countryside Thursday. A government spokesman said leftist guerrillas ambushed a national guard convoy near Zacatecoluca, about 65 kilometres west of the San Salvador. Four guerrillas died in the clash but there were no government casualties, the spokesman said.

Both the Popular Revolutionary Bloc and LP-28, which takes its name from the date of a bloody 1977 clash in the capital between government troops and leftists, are trying to install a Communist government to replace the civilian-military junta that seized power four months ago from a right-wing military ruler, President Carlos Humberto Romero.

Leftists said several groups were joining forces for a demonstration in the capital today. And the Christian Democratic party, whose members fill two of the three civilian seats on the five-member ruling junta, were staging a rally designed to offset the leftist rebellion.

Contract Bridge B. Jay Becker

You are South and the bidding has gone:

North	East	South	West
1♡	Pass	2♡	Pass
3♣	Pass	?

What would you bid now with each of the following five hands?

1.♠Q84 ♡K942 ◇K75 ♣963
2.♠963 ♡K942 ◇K75 ♣Q84
3.♠62 ♡K942 ◇862 ♣KQ96
4.♠743 ♡K942 ◇A3 ♣Q974
5.♠Q105 ♡KQ8 ◇QJ74 ♣872

1. Three hearts. Let's first consider the meaning of North's three club bid. He presumably is trying to get to a game (possibly a slam) and wants to know whether you have a minimum or maximum two heart bid. The normal range for the heart raise is 6 to 9 points, and it's now up to you to indicate more precisely how good or bad your raise was.

Here, you have close to minimum values, and you show them by simply bidding three hearts. True, you have 8 high-card points and might have had only 6 or 7 points, but they're the wrong kind of points to have and you should sign off.

2. Four hearts. The difference between this case and the preceding one is that here you have the queen of clubs instead of the queen of spades. The club queen is almost certain to be useful to partner, which is more than can be said about the spade queen. You might lose a game if you bid only three hearts and partner passed.

3. Four clubs. You have the values for a direct four heart bid, but it is better to describe your actual side values by raising clubs. This might enable North to bid a slam with a holding such as:

♠6 ♡AQ10753 ◇A ♣AJ843

4. Three diamonds. You have not only the values for a jump-raise to four hearts but also more than that. All three of your high cards are "working" cards and they are worth far more than the 9 points you assigned to them before the bidding started.

As mentioned before, the queen of clubs has grown from a card of indeterminate value to a card that's worth at least 3 and perhaps 4 points. Altogether, you can count your hand as worth about 12 points, and since your partner couldn't know this if you jumped directly to four hearts, you stop by the wayside, before bidding game, to cuebid diamonds. You hope this will help North to get to a slam.

5. Three notrump. This time, to show a balanced hand and also that you raised with only three-card trump support, you bid three notrump. This doesn't bar partner from bidding four hearts, if he prefers a suit contract, but at the same time it suggests the possibility that notrump might work out best.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Past efforts bear fruit—you receive added recognition from colleagues. Emphasis on home, business, establishing yourself on solid base. A very important transaction is completed and you are beneficiary. Aries, Libra persons play key roles.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Relative aids in finding new outlets for sales, products. You are on the move and it will be necessary to conserve energy. Be selective. Ideas are plentiful—choose quality. One you aided in past will return the favor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on special savings program. You become more aware of assets and financial potential. Cancer, Leo and another Aquarian figure in exciting scenario. Emphasis on hobby that features special collections. Count your change!

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Diversify, make inquiries, give full rein to intellectual curiosity. Lunar cycle high and you can be at right place at crucial moment. Gain indicated through social activity. Come out of shell. Be more visible than in recent past.

IF FEBRUARY 16 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are your own worst critic, you are a perfectionist, introspective, creative and spiritual. You have an inquiring mind and seldom are satisfied merely to know something occurred. You insist on finding reasons and determining motives. You are precient, able to perceive trends and cycles. Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. You are considered unorthodox, unique and a challenge to members of opposite sex. August could be your most significant month of 1980, a year in which you gain recognition and possible fame.

FUN WITH FIGURES

By J. A. H. HUNTER

"Look at that number, Dad," Susie exclaimed. "Five figures, the same number as ours if you read it backwards."

Fred smiled. "one way of putting it," he replied. "But there's more to it than that. It's just four times our number."

A real coincidence! What was the number?

(Answer Monday)

Yesterday's answer: ARTHUR was 187608.

Craving for fresh greens?

gardening
jack beastall

The craving for fresh green food is as much a sign of coming spring as is the arrival of an exploring robin. Even the non-salad eater will nibble on green onions, lettuce heart wedges and red radishes when the chance occurs.

With a patch of soil under a coldframe, or a deep planter on a balcony, these late winter treats will become reality if seeds are sown now.

Soil that has been protected with a glass coldframe cover from rain and the few freezing temperatures has now a comfortable feel to the fingers. It is loose in texture from being prepared late last fall — just the right amount of moisture remains since the sun on the glass dried the surface. Stirring the soil a little with a hand fork to level the surface, will bring some damper particles to seed level.

Plan to do this preparation and the sowing in the warmest part of the day, with sunshine if possible or at least without a cold wind to cool the whole interior of the coldframe.

A couple of short rows of green bunching onions can be thinned out from the time seedlings are four inches high, for early eating.

From then, until summer vegetables are coming in, the green onion pulling can be on a twice weekly basis at least. There may be enough larger ones at the last pulling to prepare creamed on toast or with early potatoes.

When sowing even these few seeds, be careful not to bury them too deeply. Cover with a scattering of fine soil in the frame; then firm the little rows with either a flat piece of wood or the hand. The purpose is to make contact between seeds and soil.

Have you noticed that a heavy footprint (even an encroaching car tire groove) on a recently sown boulevard will often result in the first bright green patch if not later disturbed?

A dog's footprints (cats are too dainty footed, even the heavyweights among them) can sometimes be noted as having a similar effect. This is the result of just sufficient pressure to ensure soil contact with seed.

Although carrots will take longer to reach usable size, a few short rows across the coldframe bed will be much ahead of the earliest sowing possible in the open garden.

Choose a stumpy carrot such as Red-Cored Chantenay or the Scarlet Nantes. Both are particularly good for frequent pulling from the rows as thinnings. The last ones which have the advantage of more space will be full size for the variety and still a splendid flavor.

A second sowing of the same varieties in the open during early June will give similar results into September. Again in late August I make a small sowing in the coldframe for late fal pulling.

A balcony tub can be used successfully for early green onions and radishes if a sheet of glass is laid over the top. It is easily raised on one corner for ventilation after germination.

If no glass, clear plastic can be used over wire bent to a hoop and anchored on nails in the tub sides. One side of plastic can later be raised when needing to admit air.

Lettuce or endive seeds, a dozen of each for a beginning, can be sown now in either coldframe or tub. When large enough to handle, prick out into whatever sheltered space is available under the frame glass or in other balcony tubs.

You want green edibles early. With a patch of soil and bit of back bending, they will be there growing while you plan strategy for more generous summer crops of whatever it is you crave in that season.

Sewage monitor contract to UVic

The University of Victoria has received a $21,970 contract from the Capital Regional District for scientific services.

The contract means Dr. Derek Ellis of the biology department will continue to supervise a program of sewage testing and monitoring at McMicking Point in Oak Bay.

Testing will be done by various specialist laboratories and by assistants employed by the university, working in Ellis' laboratory.

The testing to date has shown that the sewage irregularly contains trace metals, chlorinated pesticides and other contaminant hydrocarbons but in miniscule amounts close to the sensitivity of available analytical techniques.

Evidence is growing that indicates the sewage tested from the McMicking Point area has almost no biological impact, consisting almost entirely of natural but concentrated human wastes.

Dumping of contaminants into the sewage system by industries, institutes and Oak Bay householders appears to be at a minimum for an urban centre, Ellis says.

He says the tests confirm that the main concern with McMicking Point sewage is the traditional value of public health. Future disposal of sewage and monitoring should be primarily concerned with health impact and testing.

The renewed program will try to determine whether the relatively intense use of pesticides in Oak Bay's spring gardening season causes such toxins to infiltrate the sewerage system and contaminate nearby beaches and shellfish.

Taxes down drain on stored pipe

Capital Regional District taxpayers may be stuck with 5,000 feet of polyethelene pipe bought at $84 a foot in 1977 for the Clover Point outfall.

The pipe is stored near Alpha Street in Saanich and portions of it may be useless because of the way it has been piled and left unprotected in the past two years.

Steven Lackey, engineer for consultants CH2M Hill, who have been hired to design an outfall, recently warned CRD directors that studies may show that other materials should be used for the pipe.

Acquisition of the polyethelene pipe was part of an agreement involving the CRD, contractor Harry Berg, engineering consultants Ker, Priestman and Associates and Associated Engineering Services Ltd.

WORTH HIS WEIGHT in pennies, Steven Flynn, a Grade 3 student at McKenzie Elementary School, is lifted on the scales by the pennies collected by McKenzie pupils intended to pay for cataract operations in India. The collection got started in the fall when children were challenged to match a $25 dollar donation to Operation Eyesight by a parent. The weigh-in Thursday showed students had surpassed that goal by far, with more than 46 kilograms, or about $150, collected.

Chamber president sees UVic dorm as tourist hotel

By AL FORREST

Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce president Cedric Steele has proposed that the University of Victoria construct a 100-unit dormitory that could be used in summer months as a hotel to handle the tourist overflow.

UVic has a problem of few students in the dorms in summer while the city has a problem of lack of hotel rooms during the same months. Both problems could be solved with one building.

Steele raised the idea in a speech to a Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada meeting.

He also suggested the community raise $25,000 towards construction of a Gate of Harmonious Interest, a dramatic new entrance way for Chinatown.

The Chinese community has already raised $11,000 of its goal of $25,000 and the provincial government will contribute $25,000.

He also announced a pilot project to be undertaken by the Fernwood Community Association in an effort to end confrontation with developers. A panel discussion involving the asssociation and HUDAC would be the first step.

In addition, he said, a special planning committee involving many former mayors of Saanich, Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt will be formed soon. They would devise long-term goals for the region.

Steele said Vancouver Island must protect all existing transportation links, especially rail lines. All efforts must be made to save the E&N Railway because of its potential for tourism, freight and rapid transit. All existing rail lines should be kept in place for future rapid transit lines.

He said Victoria would be better off with fewer tourists staying longer periods of time. It puts a heavy strain on transportation facilities to have large numbers arrive for only two or three days. He proposed an "experience Vancouver Island" campaign.

"After a stay in Victoria, tourists should experience places like Port Hardy, Campbell River and Port Alberni."

Steele told the meeting the chamber had received 28 direct requests for information on economic opportunities since Jan. 23, the day it took over the job of industrial development commissioner on an experimental basis.

He said chamber manager Brian Small had conducted 20 potential investors on tours and had written or phoned eight other out-of-town businessmen who had expressed interest.

"If this is an example of what we can expect, we will have a busy year with the industrial development role, if we are given the job on a full-time basis."

Candidates polled on research needs

By AB KENT

All candidates from the three major parties in Greater Victoria's two federal ridings agree on the need for long-term financing for scientific research and development.

The six candidates responded this week to a questionnaire prepared by a committee of three University of Victoria professors to get their positions on university issues.

The survey was conducted by Alan Artibise, of the history department, John Greene, of the French department and Paul West, of chemistry, who distributed a detailed set of questions.

Five candidates were interviewed and the sixth, Victoria Conservative Allan McKinnon prepared written answers.

Although Liberal, Conservative and NDP candidates all agreed the federal granting agencies should have long-term budgeting, there was some variation about how much should be spent as a proportion of the gross national product.

McKinnon and Don Munro (PC Esquimalt-Saanich) followed party policy to increase research and development outlay to 2.5 per cent of the GNP.

Liberal Bruce Corbett (Victoria) favors between three and five per cent, while his Esquimalt-Saanich running mate Gerry Kristianson believes research should receive 1.5 per cent by 1983 through tax incentives and grants.

Bob Cameron (NDP Esquimalt-Saanich) considers 2.5 per cent research and development spending a priority matter.

But he says this will be difficult and should be approached in the context of an overall industrial strategy.

Robin Blencoe (NDP Victoria) would hope for 2.5 per cent by 1983 and four per cent by 1990.

The poll asked what roles should be played by the universities, government and industry.

McKinnon said the major increase in spending should come from industry itself, through tax incentives and grants.

He said universities should continue vital fundamental research but with a greater interaction with industry.

Government, McKinnon said, should help them to renew their equipment base.

Tax incentives are the only program suggested by Munro, who would focus research on energy conservation and alternatives.

He favors Canadian ownership when there is a reasonable assumption that it will work, and he feels universities should do mainly pure research with some contract work.

Corbett also felt most spending should be on energy but with no immediate large expenditures.

Training and basic research are the main role of university, with the possibility of applied research, Corbett said.

Discovery parks are favored by Kristianson, who believes in supporting high technology, if necessary by government subsidy.

Cameron wants research regionalized around universities as part of repatriating the economy, with tax incentives to be based on performance of research done in Canada, plus direct grants.

Canadian industrial development should be subsidized to ensure economic advantages of employment and balance of payments, and Cameron sees the university as a significant factor in that strategy.

He said the government should play the role of mediator and financial helper between industry and universities.

Blencoe's strategy would be to put tax pressure or incentives on multinationals to persuade them to do Canadian research with provision for federal-provincial plans for retraining and recruiting Canadian scientists.

He would like direct funding to small or medium sized firms, a buy-Canadian policy, increased funding of basic research and making available knowledge and development rights for implementation by Canadian companies.

Blencoe also sees the government as mediator between universities and the private sector.

But he said the government could use development contracts, retaining patent rights, to make research knowledge from universities available to industry.

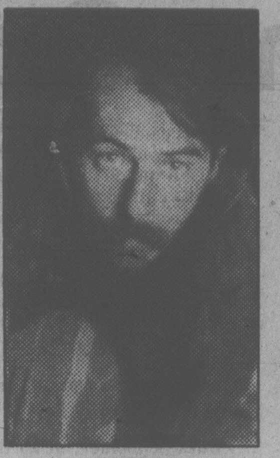
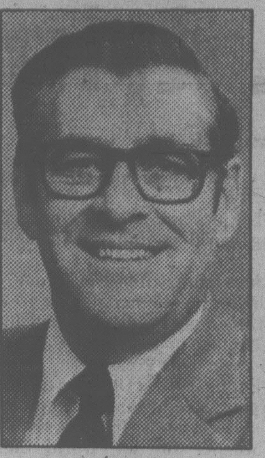
This election they feel like flipping a coin

MANLY
. . . good NDP chance

GERVAIS
. . . Liberal spoiler



LOSOSKY
. . . Rhino outsider



TAYLOR
. . . Tory incumbent

KNOTT
. . . Communist hopeful

By DEREK SIDENIUS

A cold, grey mist hangs over Cowichan Bay as Bruce Robertson works on the rigging of his troller, Pacific King, docked at the fishermen's wharf.

How's he going to vote? He ponders the question.

"I guess the same as last time," he says. "I'll just flip a coin."

Robertson's flippant reply is fairly typical of the voters in this large, sprawling riding of Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands.

Even at this stage with the countdown to polling day almost over, there is widespread uncertainty among the ridings's 58,000-plus voters on how they will vote.

"It's all so mixed up a person can't even form an opinion," says Claude Furlong of Ladysmith. "No one seems to know what he's doing.

"It's the most confusing election I've ever seen."

If there are logical, cogent reasons why someone should vote one way or another, most voters have been unable to find them.

No one is forecasting the outcome of this race. It's strictly a toss-up between incumbent Conservative Don Taylor, and the New Democratic Party hopeful, Jim Manly.

Liberal Leo Gervais may be a dark horse, but it's doubtful his role will be anything more than spoiler.

Ernie Knott of the Communist Party of Canada, and Rhino Louis (Crowbird) Lesosky round out the list of candidates.

Knott, an inveterate campaigner, enjoys the respect of the others in the race but he'll be lucky to get more than the 81 votes cast in his direction last May.

If Lesosky wins he say's he'll demand an immediate recount. No fear.

To the average resident in the riding which extends from Ladysmith to View Royal and takes in the southern Gulf Islands and West Coast to Nitinat, the election has been low-key and lacklustre, a carbon copy of the May affair and even less wanted.

The national events have so overshadowed the local riding that few persons can even name the local candidates.

There is an undercurrent of hostility and cynicism about the election.

Chides Harold Bissett, a semi-retired contractor living near Ladysmith:

"Those educated idiots back in Ottawa seem to be doing their damnest to mess up the country.

"Why didn't they give Clark a little more time?

"I don't think they are thinking about the welfare of the country when they get us into another election that is going to cost us all another $52 million.

"I voted for Clark last time . . . for a change.

"But this time I don't even know if I'm going to vote. I'm fed up to the teeth. Our politicians aren't using common sense."

Taylor, a 47-year-old former high school teacher, is capitalizing on that feeling of disenchantment.

The main message in his election literature is this is an unwanted election, at least from the Conservative standpoint.

Taylor feels personally gypped. He was just learning the ropes in Ottawa and getting familiar with the three areas he'd selected to monitor — fisheries and forestry, veteran's affairs and Indian affairs — when his party was defeated.

To rub salt into the wound the defeat came on the very day he was scheduled to make his maiden speech in the House.

Manly, on the other hand, is counting on the public's disaffection with Clark to slip past Taylor in the vote count.

In May he lost out by a 1,500-vote margin — 17,471 to 19,025.

He would have won but for the polls south of the Malahat.

From Goldstream on, Taylor took the lead and never looked back.

Actually Taylor's strength started to build as the counts came in just south of Duncan. He took six of the seven polls in Cowichan Bay, lost only one poll at Shawnigan Lake and captured all but 17 of the 90 polls in the western communities.

Surprisingly Taylor won 11 of the 16 polls in Sooke and the single poll at Jordan River which provincially are NDP strongholds.

Manly and his legion of supporters are doing their utmost to woo the voters in those areas.

"We're concentrating on the polls we won," Manly explains. "Our policy is to work from strength."

Most days he and his wife Eva are out door-knocking. He says he's encouraged by the response; it's definitely more favorable. Last May he was bitten by dogs three times, but this year he hasn't been bitten once.

Taylor's strategy is to entrench his support in the areas he won in the south and build up a stronger organization in the Duncan area where the vote was split last time roughly down the middle.

So far he's managed to quadruple the number of scrutineers for election day, a sure sign to Taylor of welling support and interest.

The two men are vastly different in the way they conduct their campaigns.

Taylor is a consummate salesman. Highly organized, he whisks around the hustings like a dervish. Often while canvassing door-to-door he'll jog the route, pausing just long enough to hand the homeowner a copy of his pamphlet. "I'm after your vote," he says with a disarming smile. "Hope you can see your way to support me." And off he goes.

Manly is more circumspect. There's always a hand-shake, a little preamble, and then the inevitable "Do you have any questions?"

A former minister of the United Church in Ladysmith — he resigned in December to devote his energies to his campaign full-time — Manly is trying to change his image as a mild-mannered, soft-spoken sort of fellow.

He realizes he should come across as a more forceful and assertive campaigner.

But it's a struggle to make the adjustment. "All my training (in the church) has been to be a listener to people's concerns," he says.

While he believes that quality is basic to what a politician should be, there are some people in the riding who argue a preacher shouldn't be involved in politics.

Muriel Winter, manager of the Ladysmith NDP office, has a ready answer for them. What about Tommy Douglas, she contends. He was once a minister, too.

Case closed.

Douglas is still the grand old man in these parts. Manly could have used him but Douglas has been in Hawaii the past month enjoying a holiday ironically provided by the party faithful on his retirement last spring. He returns today.

The unknown factor in this election is the Liberal vote. Last May the Liberal candidate, well-known environmentalist David Anderson, got 7,075 votes.

The candidate this time, Leo Gervais, 42, is little known outside Cowichan Valley.

Whether or not he'll be able to attract as many votes as Anderson is probably the most important question in the election.

If he does, Taylor stands a good chance of being reelected. If he doesn't there could be a swing towards the NDP. That, at least, is Manly's hope.

Like Taylor, Gervais is a school teacher. He has been active in the local Liberal riding association since the mid-1960s.

Gervais has no illusions of victory at this stage. He's primarily out to establish a solid basis for future elections.

His campaign manager Jerry Tothill, wife of the provincial Liberal leader, describes the election strategy as "very loose."

"But that's the Liberal way," she quips.

The Liberals are obviously having the most fun in this election. Then again, they have the least to lose.

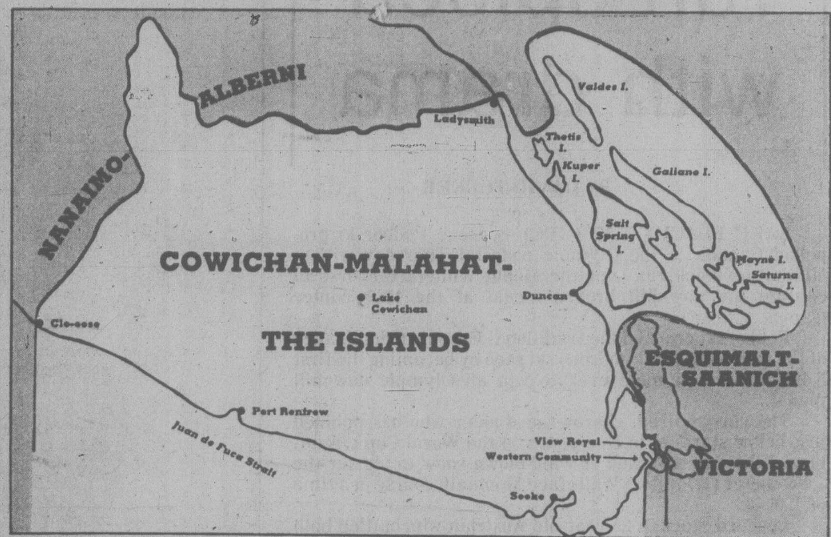
Mrs. Tothill notes the strong anti-Trudeau feeling that was rampant last May has all but vanished.

"Last time none of us would have dared to go door-to-door canvassing. We'd have been thrown out on the street," she says.

This time the canvassers have at least been able to go door-knocking without fear of injury.

They've even met some residents who've admitted they are Liberals at heart. But the implication is they may not vote that way.

ELECTION '80 THE ISLAND



TOWN TALK

The ballot box holds a fatal fascination for a politician but only if his own future is at stake. At other times, other considerations take over.

Premier Bill Bennett is in Hawaii and has no intention of cutting short his vacation to vote in the federal election Monday. He also failed to vote in the advance polls.

To be fair, if Joe Clark or Pierre Trudeau were from B.C., would they come back from Hawaii to vote for Bill Bennett? Certainly Ed Broadbent wouldn't.

Top student talkers from Western Canada are oiling their tonsils and readying their arguments for Saturday.

Teams from UVic and the Universities of Manitoba, Calgary, Alberta, B.C. and Pearson College will start talking at 9 a.m. sharp in D Wing of the Clerihue Building at UVic in the Western Canada Debating Championships.

Elimination rounds will be held from 9 a.m to 1.30, semi-finals at 3.30 p.m. and the final goes at 4.30 p.m.

Admission will be free, which only goes to prove that talk is cheap.

A link with the past is being severed by the government of British PM Margaret Thatcher, dubbed by her critics, Attila the Hen.

After 429 years, the tiny sixpence (it's about the size of a dime) is being taken out of circulation.

Known in Cockney rhyming slang as a tartan banner for the word tanner, a corruption of the Romany word tawno, meaning young, hence small, the sixpence was even celebrated in that ancient chesnut of a song, I've Got Sixpence, Jolly, Jolly Sixpence.

. . . But not for long, it appears.

Long-time Revenue Canada PR Betty Newton is quitting on election day — but it's not quite what it seems.

Mrs. Newton is not worried about a change in government. It's just that she's been doing the same thing for eight years, including countless trips out of town, and she's packing it in.

Her new assignment looks even more challenging, although it's closer to home. She will become campaign manager and public relations spokesman for the United Way.

Few people who attended this week's concert by the world famous Vienna Choir Boys realized it was a history-making event of sorts.

Michael Gormlay, the conductor on this North American tour, is a Canadian and this was the first time in its near 500-year history that the choir has sung under any other than a Viennese conductor.

To top it off, it was also the first time Gormlay has conducted the choir in a Canadian concert, the group having come directly to Victoria from Alaska.

Jacquie Good has been in town for three weeks and still feels like a stranger.

Which doesn't say much for Little Ol' Friendly Victoria.

"I find there is a great need for an out-of-towners' club," Good suggests.

She came here with a group of other Ontarians when the film company she works for — Scene II Productions — moved lock, stock and barrel from Toronto. Good thinks there must be others feeling a similar discomfort.

Newcomers who would like to form groups are invited to write Good at Box 808, Victoria Press.

Some politicians shun the limelight, but others are always thinging of ways to stay in the public eye.

Take Saanich Ald. Irene Block, for example. Block paid for display ads in both the Times and Colonist Feb. 14 to send a Valentines Day message to the municipality.

The alderman explained she isn't getting much mail lately and sending a Valentine seemed to be a good way to stay in touch with residents.

"Tell me how you'd like to keep the Saanich you love," the message says.

More than $2,300 has been raised so far for the 11 Planes children who lost both their parents in a marine accident last month.

The fund grew by $1,050 when Ron Andrews of VI90 was able to sell several fishing charter trips donated by Cheanuh Marina in two days.

Additional pledges can be made by phoning Malcolm Anderson at VI90 or by leaving the cash at Westcoast Savings Credit Union.

With an editorial stating that the job has become too difficult to continue, the Beckley Farm News ceased publication this week. The James Bay community newspaper was the house organ of the James Bay Residents' League.

"Collecting advertising, typing and layout, and distribution are all time consuming aspects and have become increasingly difficult to keep up with. All of the volunteers now either work or attend school full time or have small children to look after," explained an official.

But some of the paper's staff of volunteers now report biweekly to Cable 10's Neighborhood Update program and the JBRL hopes this will fill the information gap.

A group of Conservatory of Music students organized by pianist Kristine Beny are presenting a benefit concert in support of the aid program for Vietnamese refugees.

Among the outstanding young Victoria talent taking part are pianists Walter Prossnitz, Miranda Wong and Allen Reiser and soprano Ingrid Attrot.

Boxing loses on split decision

By PAUL MINVIELLE

A feint, a few jabs, a right cross and a few cross jibes and the proposed Victoria athletic commission lost on a split decision by city council Thursday.

Ald. Gretchen Brewin answered the bell for round one of Thursday's meeting with a flailing attack on boxing, lashing out with the statistic that six boxers died annually over the past 15 years in North America.

"In the last two or three months, there have been four deaths."

Reaching into the magazine Science Digest, she landed a solid blow with the headline: "The Punch Drunk Syndrome: What Really Happens to a Boxer's Brain."

Brewin admitted, however, an athletic commission would ensure that managers, promoters and referees are knowledgeable and qualified.

Winding up for what she hoped was a knockout punch, Brewin threw out a Rudyard Kipling hook: "The end of a fight is a tombstone."

Dancing out quickly in the second round, Ald. Ken Sinclair said the proposed commission would legalize professional and semi-professional bouts in the city and have the power to allow or disallow a fight.

Then he countered Brewin's battering of boxing, declaring: "I don't believe it's the prerogative of this council to dictate what citizens can or can't watch."

He said the commission would avert many of the injuries Brewin had mentioned.

In round three, Ald. John Cooper bobbed and weaved around the six-fatalities-a-year figure.

Cooper claimed there is probably greater damage caused in the National Hockey League and there are 50,000 people killed on U.S. highways every year.

But no one, he said, is considering eliminating the sport of hockey or eliminating all highways.

In the end, the commission avoided a knockout but lost its bid for recognition on a split-decision. Council voted 5-3 against it.

Composting issue in Tipton's court

By BRENDA DALGLISH

Metchosin regional director Mac Tipton is being put to the test over the question of a septage composting site.

Capital Regional Board directors agreed this week to purchase a 12-acre site in Metchosin for the proposed operation — next door to Tipton's house.

The CRD plans to turn the sludge from septic tanks into a saleable fertilizer by a composting process.

CRD chief engineer Norman Howard said if the district's health officer, Dr. Allen Arneil, gives his approval to the final product, it will be sold as fertilizer for about $3 a yard.

Tipton said he supported the land purchase because he believes in the concept of composting septage.

He said everyone who has visited a similar operation in Kelowna assures him there is no smell from the site.

"I do hope it will function as they say it will," he said.

Tipton said he intends to contact the Metchosin Ratepayers Association and propose a public meeting if residents want more information on the proposal.

Howard said the CRD has a budget of $400,000 this year for land purchase, start-up and operating costs.

Dr. Arneil will require stringent testing of the material before it can be sold as fertilizer.

The district will continue to charge septic tank disposal operators for dumping of the material, he said, although rates haven't been set.

VGH abortion moratorium

Victoria General Hospital will not perform any abortions until its legal position is totally clear.

Alan Patterson, executive director of the hospital board, said Thursday he has received a preliminary report from the hospital's solicitor and is awaiting more information.

The hospital board sought legal advice last week following receipt of a letter from its three-man therapeutic abortion committee which suggested the board may have acted illegally.

The letter was in reponse to the board's decision to circumvent its abortion committee, which was turning down the vast majority of abortion applications it considered, and replace it with Royal Jubilee Hospital's abortion committee.

Patterson said the VGH board sought an opinion from the attorney general's ministry in 1972 when it first considered the practise of using two committees.

today's markets

Toronto

The Toronto stock market was down sharply in active mid-afternoon trading today.

Thirteen of the 14 stock groups in the composite index declined, led by transportation. Only merchandising advanced.

Volume of trading by 2 p.m. was 5.95 million shares, compared with 6.56 million shares at the same time Thursday.

Declines outnumbered advances 294 to 180 with 190 issues unchanged.

Trading in shares of Gulf Canada Ltd., which was halted late Thursday, resumed shortly after the opening and by 2 p.m. the stock was up 4⅝ to $133⅛.

Gulf said its directors have recommended a five-for-one split of the company's stock. Shareholders will be asked to approve the split on April 24.

Among industrials, Cominco tumbled 2½ to $71, Petrofina Canada 2⅛ to $50⅝, Falconbridge Nickel A 2 to $130, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas 2 to $123½ and Texaco Canada 1⅜ to $77¾.

Sterling Trust gained 2¾ to $24¾, MPG Investments 1¼ to $9¾, Noranda Mines ½ to $27⅜, Norcen Energy Resources ⅜ to $36⅞ and Inco ¼ to $33¾

United Keno Hill dropped 2 to $7, Dome Mines 1½ to $77½ and Bethlehem Copper 1⅛ to $25. Consolidated Morrison Explorations rose 45 cents to $4.75 and Canray Resources 40 cents to $3.30.

Canadian Homestead Oils lost 1¾ to $28¾, Ranger Oil Canada ¾ to $28¼ and Page Petroleum ¾ to 31⅛. Ram Petroleums advanced 1¼ to $19 and Oakwood Petroleums ⅞ to $19⅝.

Vancouver

Prices were mixed in heavy early trading today on the Vancouver Stock Exchange. B.C. Resources Investment Corp. led trading in the industrials, gaining .05 at $7.70 on 12,545 shares. Taro Industries was unchanged at $3.95 on 2,300, Computrex Centres remained steady at .25 on 2,000 and Proflex Ltd. was unchanged at .25 on 500.

On the resource and development board, Amer Pyramid gained .20 at $3.75 on 16,501. Stall Lake Mines was up .05 at $1.55 on 15,000, Cream Silver Mines was up .01 at $1.21 on 14,700 and Hecate Gold was unchanged at $1.10 on 13,400.

New York

The New York stock market took another sharp drop today, depressed by some bad inflation news and a new credit-tightening move by the Federal Reserve Board.

Before the opening the labor department reported that its producer price index rose at a 19.2-per-cent seasonally adjusted annual rate in January. That marked the biggest increase in the index of wholesale prices for finished goods in more than 5½ years.

A short while later the Federal Reserve raised its discount rate — the rate it charges on loans to its member commercial banks — to 13 from 12 per cent.

The Reserve said the credit-tightening measure was prompted by recent inflationary pressures, including rising prices of imported oil.

Point-plus losses were common among the oil stocks. Exxon fell 1¼ to $63⅝; Mobil 1¼ to $62⅛, and Standard Oil of California 1¾ to $69.

London

The London stock market was lower near the close of trading today.

The Financial Times index dropped 8.3 to 465.6.

Industrials, golds and banks declined.

Canadian stocks eased.

Times wins cartoon appeal

Nemetz said the statements and actions of Vander Zalm including the statements concerning Indians publicized only a few days before the cartoon "provided the necessary sub-stratum of sufficiently publicized facts to enable the ordinary reader to recognize the nexus of the cartoon and the statements."

"Ordinary and reasonable persons in this country are well acquainted with the allegorical nature of political cartoons and, in my opinion, would have little difficulty in recognizing this cartoon as a comment upon such facts, a comment indeed of the very sort which Mr. Bierman testified he intended to make.

"Nor can it be doubted that the facts commented upon were matters of considerable public interest and concerned the minister in his public rather than in his personal capacity."

Nemetz concluded that Bierman honestly expressed his real view and "it is my respectful view that the cartoon represents fair comment on a matter of public interest."

Mr. Justice E.E. Hinkson said in his judgement: "In my view it was not intended that the cartoon be taken literally by the readers of the newspaper, nor do I believe that the average reader would do so. Political cartoons are familiar to readers of newspapers and are known to employ both caricature and symbolism to convey their message."

Hinkson said it is clear that because of the label "Human Resources" on the figure portrayed in the cartoon it was intended to refer to the public life of Vander Zalm rather than his private life.

Mr. Justice Peter Seaton said cartoonists do not have special rights and the law is the same for them as everyone else.

"A cartoon is but a particular means of communicating and it is subject to the same law as other means," Seaton said.

"It does not follow for the purposes of defamation cartoons are to be interpreted literally. That is not how they are seen by ordinary persons or by the law."

He agreed with Munroe that the cartoon was not amusing but a cartoon can be in bad taste and not be defamatory.

"If this trial, held in Victoria in 1979, had taken place with a jury I am not at all sure that the cartoon would have been found to be defamatory," he said, adding that in view of his agreement in the defence of fair comment he needn't go further.

Mr. Justice J.A. Aikins said Munroe was in error in finding that the cartoon would be understood as meaning that Vander Zalm was a person of a cruel and sadistic nature who enjoys inflicting suffering on helpless persons.

He said the reasonable man of ordinary intelligence would clearly understand that political cartoons are rhetorical in the sense that the cartoonist makes his point indirectly by use of symbolism, allegory, or satire and exaggeration, and the reasonable man of ordinary intelligence would not look at the cartoon in a vaccuum.

"He would understand that it was a political cartoon — the label 'Human Resources' on the figure shows this — in the context of his general knowledge of the respondent as a poltical figure."

Mr. Justice William Craig asked if the cartoon would tend to lower Vander Zalm in the estimation of right-thinking members of society.

"Many newspaper readers would, probably, not even notice the cartoon. Many who noticed it would give it only cursory glance. Some might be amused by it. Some might be angered by it. Some might consider it reflected more on the judgement of the cartoonist than on the qualities of the respondent. Whatever the reaction I am inclined to the view that the so-called right-thinking members of society generally would not change their estimation of the plaintive merely because of the cartoon."

Craig said that although this was his own reaction, he could not say that Munroe was clearly wrong in finding the cartoon defamatory. So Craig said he proceeded on the premise that it was defamatory and then considered the defence of fair comment.

"Many would regard the cartoon as anything but fair comment. On the other hand, I think that there was a basis upon which the appellants could properly rely upon the defense of fair comment," he said.

Turkish violence

closed because of the violence.

Large slum areas are controlled now by the militants, who have started to set up so-called People's Committees. With skirmishes still going on, strikes continuing, most of the shops closed and the main streets deserted, Izmir looks like a war-torn city.

Terrorist attacks have spread to other parts of Turkey, too. In Istanbul, a train was attacked last week and three passengers were killed. Leftist militants have claimed responsibility for raids on police stations and seizure of arms.

In Tunceli, gendarmes opened fire with automatic rifles on leftist workers demonstrating in the eastern Turkish city 950 kilometres from Izmir in support of the cotton-yarn factory workers. One worker was killed and three wounded, two of them severely.

Further east in Kars, close to the Soviet border, leftists bombed a number of banks, but no casulaties were reported.

In Istanbul, Turkey's biggest city with a population of almost five million, a group of left-wing students were involved in a gun battle with the police. One student was killed.

In some quarters of Istanbul, militants have forced hundreds of shopkeepers to close down in protest against recent price rises. In spite of warnings from martial law authorities, many frightened shopkeepers complied with the militants' threats.

Energy-aware Genoa Bay home-owner has house designed for solar power

Sheila Kincaid's recently-built Genoa Bay house suits her very well. Not only from a spacial-design concept, but from the point of view of fitting in with her philosophical beliefs about how we should all be thinking about energy now and how we will use it in future.

Gil Parker of Ark Solar Products, who installed the $10,000 system in the Moore & Campbell-designed home, says this system is designed to produce 75% of the hot water, and between 60% and 70% of the heat.

"Oil has increased in price by 17% per year for the past three years" says Gil Parker. "And I'm sure we're going to see even bigger jumps in years to come" he adds. With this in mind, he says the Kincaid solar system will have paid for itself in less than ten years time.

For the scientifically minded, the Kincaid solar system is a drain-down system which provides heat via a water-to-air heat exchanger in the electric furnace plenum. An array of 400 square feet of double-glazed copper collectors supplies heat to be stored in a 1176-gallon fibreglass solar storage tank in the basement. The tank will cycle from 25 to 50 degrees Celsius in winter, from 40 to 80 in the summer. The 8' x8' insulated tank room is sealed in winter, vented to the outside in summer.

The collection of solar heat is started by an automatic differential thermostat which activates the collector pump when the collectors are warmer than the storage tank. Similarly the pump is shut off when the collectors cool to within a degree of the tank temperature.

The distribution of space heat is automatic. The first stage of the room thermostat starts the high speed air-fan and the solar water circulating pump. If insufficient heat is available in the solar tank, or more rapid heating is desired, the second stage of the room thermostat is activated, starting the electric furnace and stopping the solar circulating pump. As soon as the room thermostat is satisfied with the amount of heat received, it will shut off either the electric furnace or the solar circulating pump, and the furnace fan will revert to slow-speed operation.

The water supplying the hot water tank passes through a long copper coil in the solar storage tank. It will not require electrical heating as the water will be hotter than the thermostat setting, except on those days when there is insufficient solar power.

COLLECTIBLES

Collectors advised to hang in there if they expect to make profit

By JOHN HEARN

I find myself thinking a great deal these days about the long term implications of collecting. I am never enthusiastic about possible short term profit taking — not for collectors, that is — for traders maybe, but they are different. Like any other commodity, antiques and collectibles are susceptible to quick profit taking but such profits are not interesting to the serious collector.

Profit is always measured against the initial investment. If you buy a rare fruit jar for $50 and later sell it for $100 — that is a profit. But if you buy 200 Crown jars for 25 cents each and later dispose of them for 50 cents each, that is an equal profit — but who would bother to trade in Crown jars? But what happens if you take those same Crown jars and put them away for 100 years — or 200 or 300 years?

I am talking about the fairly early but common Crown jars which no one wants.

There will never be any more of them. In the course of time, through breakage and loss they will become fewer and fewer in number and eventually, very, very old, they will wind up in museums and be rated as 'priceless'.

Absurd? Readers who came here from Europe will not agree. I was talking recently with some British collectors who find it difficult to take us seriously because of the youthfullness of our collectibles. A mere 100 years old means nothing to them — not to be bothered with. 300-year-old artificats are so much more interesting — to them.

I believe that once we see past the golden glow of short term profits we shall see that this is a wonderful time for the collector. There are some people alive who saw virtually the first of the automobiles and they may yet live to see the last of them — at least in their present form. During the first few decades of this century there were more than 100 manufacturers of automobiles in Canada — now long gone. Every trace of any one of them is a preceless collectors item already.

Only very rich people can collect antique automobiles but more democratically priced items still surface from time to time — serial number plates, radiator emblems, hub caps from the days when only the actual hub was covered, ornate radiator caps, lamps, automobile club badges, catalogue sheets, driver's manuals, garage signs, magazine advertising — all these items are getting pricier by the minute but imagine what they will be worth 100 years from now when the last item which could be found in an old repair shop has long since been discovered and all that remains is in the hands of collectors.

I was talking a while back about the possibility of some of today's artifacts becoming the collector's item of the future but it is so much easier to collect pre-1939 items and get a 40 year start on the game. Garage sales, church bazaars and flea markets are treasure troves of all kinds of items which predate World War Two, which still cost virtually nothing and which, in another 20 years will be fetching big dollars and in another 100 will be worth a fortune.

When was the last time you saw a glass milk bottle with the name of the dairy embossed on it — they have already disappeared. Flat fifty cigarette tins still trade for under $1.00 — but for how much longer? Where would you look for Lester B. Pearson campaign literature, for programs of the performance of Camelot which opened the O'Keefe Centre, for commemoratives honouring the St. Lawrence Seaway, for newspaper headlines plotting Marilyn Bell's epochal swim across Lake Ontario, Hurricane Hazel, the blowing up of Ripple Rock? All recent historically, all gone.

People who saved the last edition of the Toronto Telegram are already enquiring into its possible worth. They are fifty years early. The more that get tired waiting and throw them out, the more valuable will the remainder be.

The grat thing about collecting is that all things show a profit if you keep them long enough — to you or your children or your great grandchildren.

Hang in there.

Removing wallpaper that's not drystrippable

BY A. J. HAND

The first time I ever removed wallpaper from a room, the job was a snap. The paper was old and brittle, actually falling off the walls in places, and the glue had lost its life. I sponged on a liquid wallpaper remover and the paper practically threw itself into the trash can.

Things don't usually go that well. New papers such as the vinyl and foil types are impermeable to liquid removers. So are ordinary papers that have been covered with paint. All these problem papers call for a few special techniques before they will yield.

Wallpaper removal is a messy job, so the first order of business is to spread plastic film on the floor along the walls to be stripped. To make cleanup easiest, tape the film to your baseboard with extra wide masking tape.

Then remove all switch and outlet plates — the old paper runs behind them — and use the masking tape to cover the fixtures. This will keep them dry.

scuff it up by rubbing 50-grit sandpaper wrapped around a block. The idea here is to cut through the waterproof surface of the paper so the remover can soak through and soften the paste.

If the paper is an especially tough vinyl, sanding may not do the job. In that case, score the paper every few inches with a utility knife. Use only enough pressure to break through the surface film so you won't damage the wall.

Now mix up a batch of liquid wallpaper remover, which is sold at all paint and hardware stores. Sponge the mixture onto the wall, or better yet, spray it. An ordinary pump-type garden sprayer set to a fine mist does a great job.

Rinse it out before use so you won't risk spraying any pesticide residues around the house.

Giving the remover time to soak inwill make the whole job go faster.

Once the paste is soft, start removing the paper. Some fabric-reinforced types are so strong you can often pull them off the wall.

Most papers will require scraping. A wide, flexible putty knife is a safe, effective scraper. If you use it with care it shouldn't damage the relatively fragile surface of a gypsum board wall.

Remove as much paper as you can.Some papers will not come off in a single soak-and-scrape operation, so you may have to repeat the process. Final step is to squeegee the wall dry with an ordinary window squeegee. Clean up the mess and allow the room to air out so any remaining moisture can evaporate.

Redfern Street

Redfern Street was named to commemorate a one-time Mayor of Victoria.

When Charles E. Redfern, jeweler and watchmaker in England, was 34, he tired of conventional life in London. British Columbia was in the news then, and Mr. Redfern decided to search for gold in the Cariboo.

He took passage around Cape Horn in the steamer Tynemouth, the famous "bride ship," which reached Victoria in September of 1862. Mr. Redfern found Victoria booming, and instead of going to the Cariboo he started a jewelry and watchmaking business here. He liked Victoria, sent for his mother and sisters, and established them in a house on Belleville Street.

Meanwhile, he built a handsome new building on Government Street and put a big clock over the front door — a clock that for years was a landmark in Victoria.

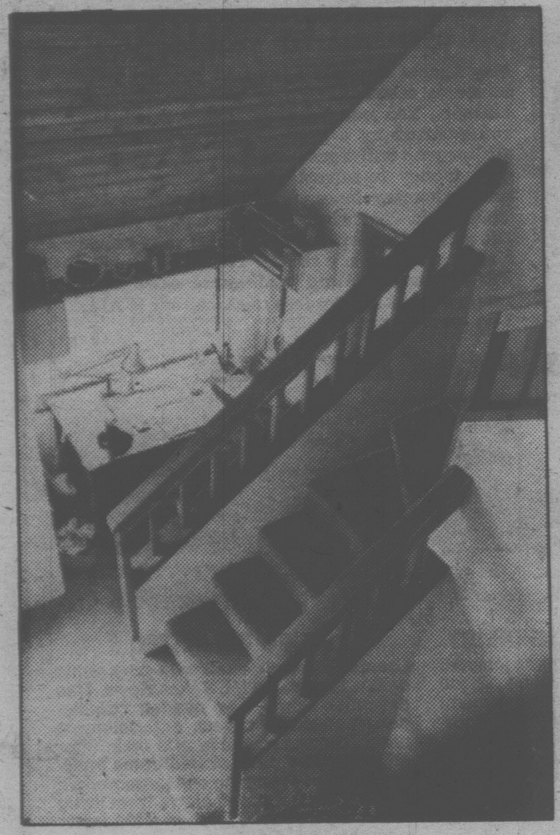
Kitchen overlooks living room in Kincaid home at Genoa Bay. Pattern cards showed that owner wanted to be able to talk to guests while preparing food. Much of furniture is built in, like this upholstered fireside seating.

Personalized design results from architects' unique approach

By ANNE SWANNELL



Sheila Kincaid's pattern cards included idea that she would like a space with a view: a place to write where reference books would be within reach. Writing space should be part of living area, cards said; not shut off from it, yet separate. Resulting 'alcove' off living room has windows on three sides, door leading to small deck for sunny-day reading.

Two Victoria graduate architects are practising an intrigueing method of designing houses exactly suited to clients' wants and needs.

Their "pattern language" cards make it easy for a client to convey his likes and dislikes, fantasies and must-haves to the architects, and make it possible for them to design a house that will fit the actual pattern of the client's life.

Such things as what he or she is like when they get up in the morning, where they like to drink their coffee, what sort of entertaining they do, whether they shower at night or at dawn, are thought about and taken into account.

The architects generally begin by having about three meetings a week with a client for several weeks. General feelings are discussed; a kind of stream-of-consciousness technique, whereby initial feelings and emotions about the environment are recorded.

Tom Moore of Moore & Campbell Designer/Builders Co. Ltd. explains the rationale behind their special approach:

"Basically the client or end user is in the best position to determine his or her needs and requirements, and given an approach that will allow them to think in a creative way, the clients themselves will bring design insights forward."

"We talk about activities rather than spaces" further explains Doug Campbell. "In this way, pre-conceived ideas about what spaces 'should be' can be overcome, and a space custom-tailored to the client's needs will be generated."

For example, the word 'kitchen' evokes ideas about fridges, stoves, dishwashers, etc., whereas talking about cooking will evoke ideas of what the real qualities of a cooking space should be. (Sheila Kincaid, who lives in this house, bakes bread. There is a special right-height counter for kneading built in to her kitchen). It's what goes on that counts.

The architects make up a list of all the activities that take place in the client's home environment.

They then discuss with clients which elements of an imagined space are either pleasing or displeasing, and write them down on colored cards.

An average house will generate from 60-100 pattern cards, which are then color-coded to an activity area and become the building blocks of the design process.

Each pattern card is a design tool that tells the designers something specific. For example, one of Sheila's living room pattern cards says "living area should be big enough to hold a lot of people, yet be a place where one person won't feel lost". As well as these words, there is a sketch, which shows the concept rather than a specific room shape. This is so people don't get "image fix" and so that they will remain flexible until later in the process.

When the cards are all done, there may be fifteen yellow kitchen cards, ten blue bedroom/bathing cards, 17 green living area cards, and so on.

They are an excellent method of organizing ideas, and a cross check to make sure that no important ideas have been left out.

Sheila Kincaid, retired director of The Burnaby Art Gallery, has travelled round the world, and has a houseful of beautiful and intrigueing artifacts to prove it. It was while she was camping in Morrocco that she met one of the architects of her future home.

It is a house especially designed for someone living alone who frequently has overnight guests and family visitors.

The house is built of cedar on what must be one of the most beautiful view properties on the coast.

The most noteworthy feature of the house is the placement and size of its windows. It doesn't look as though it has an excessive amount of glass from the outside, but the house is full of light, and the living room has three ocean views to offer.

Windows are all at varying heights, depending on the activity going on in that area...around the bathtub, so you can see out when bathing, at sit-down height in the dining room, across from the kitchen work counter.

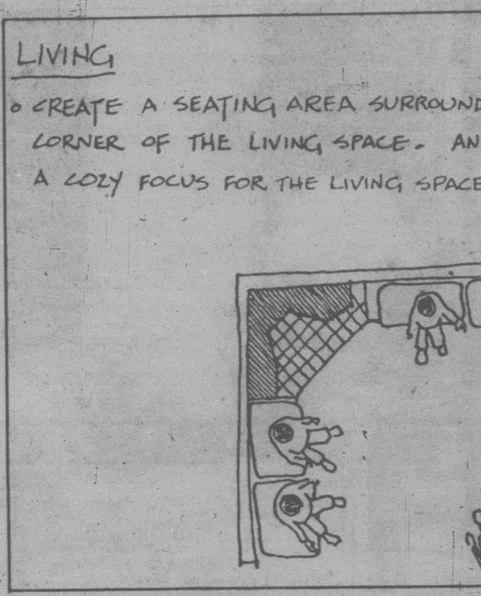
The living area is large enough that an onslaught of Sheila's children and grandchildren doesn't overcrowd it. Yet there are private spaces within it; one has a feeling of unlimited space, yet room to be alone.

Peruvian and Bolivian weavings, pottery from Africa, leather, wicker, and wood pieces from all around the world, and a collection of art that some galleries would envy bring warmth and excitement to this contemporary westcoast home.

This love for a wide range of culturally divergent art forms shows itself particularly in Sheila's bedroom.

Between her bedrom and the bathroom is a sliding Shoji screen. It looks exactly like the Japanese wood-and-rice-paper ones, except that this one was made by a local carpenter, and the "rice paper" is really a semi-translucent plastic that's easy to care for, less delicate. This screen separates sleeping and bathing areas, or slides back to make them one. Bedspread and drapes are bright royal blue woven cotton. Carpet is natural rattan squares.

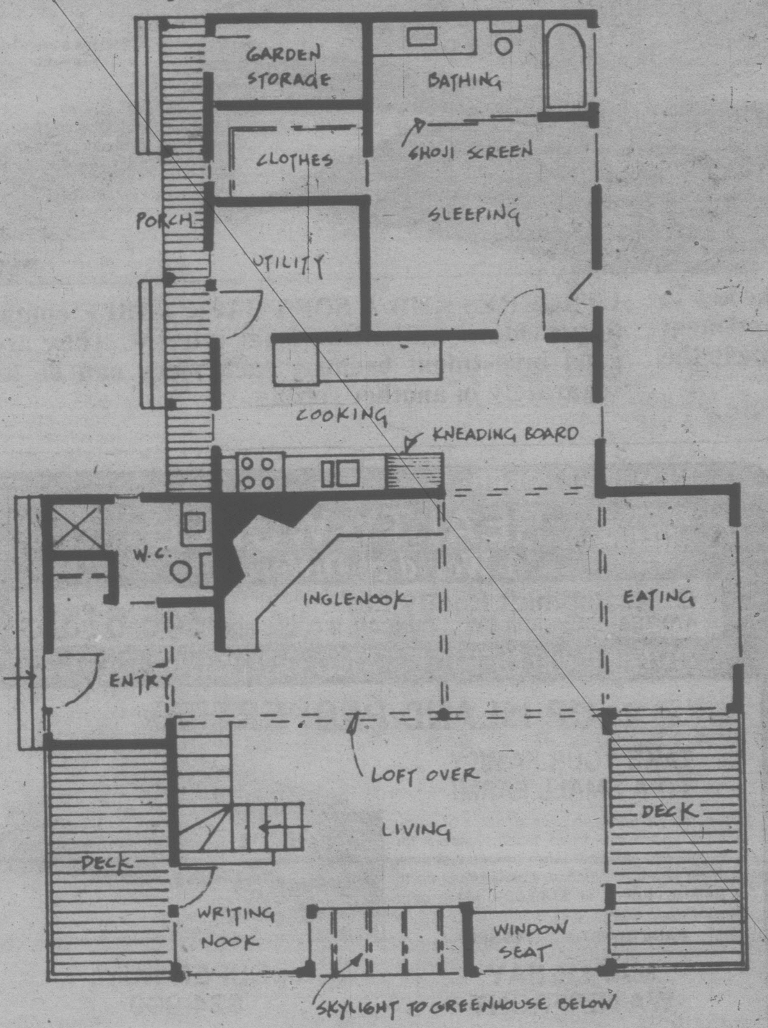
In the bathroom, a sunken bathtub, re-enamelled by The Bathtub Doctor, a firm that refinishes old bathtubs right in the home, is surrounded by royal blue ceramic tiles which form a seat and become the floor. Plain white ceramic tiles surround the window, continue along wall at both ends of tub. Interspersed, are white tiles with blue abstract designs on them, the work of Nanaimo master potter Byron Johnstad.



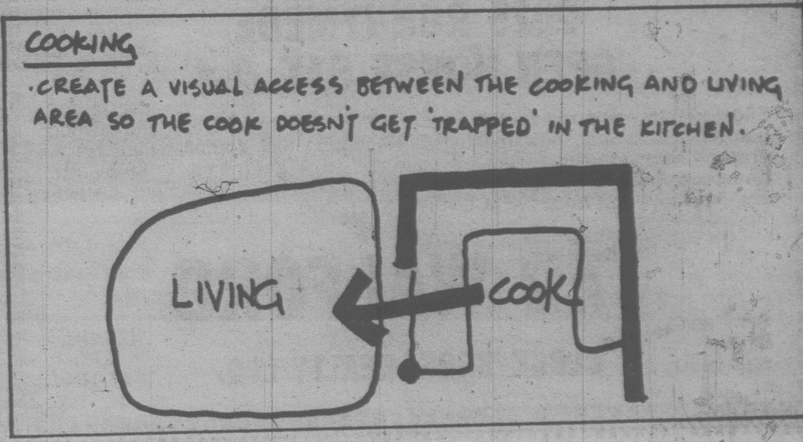
LIVING

- CREATE A SEATING AREA SURROUNDING THE FIREPLACE IN A CORNER OF THE LIVING SPACE. AN 'INGLENOOK' WILL PROVIDE A COZY FOCUS FOR THE LIVING SPACE.

One of the pattern language cards used in 'home design'

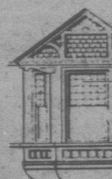


Only visual evidence that this is a solar house is the double-glazed collectors on the south-facing slope of the roof. There is a tank room, but that's in the basement. This solar system provides 75% of the domestic hot water and 60% to 70% of the spaceheat. Electric heat is used as needed to achieve desired water or space temperatures at times when insufficient solar heat is available. Picture shows one of the large living room windows, flanked by a writing/study alcove on one side, and on the other by a day-bed alcove ideal for reading, for over-night guests, or for gazing out at view.

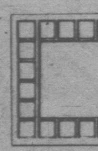


COOKING

- CREATE A VISUAL ACCESS BETWEEN THE COOKING AND LIVING AREA SO THE COOK DOESN'T GET 'TRAPPED' IN THE KITCHEN.



AN ORIEL WINDOW is a bay window that projects from the wall of an upper storey and is carried on brackets or a cantilever. The difference between a bay window and an oriel is that the projection of a a bay window starts at the ground while an oriel starts above the first storey.



MULLIONS are the strips inside the sash that divide a multipaned window. Also called "muntins".

FLEXIBLE FURNISHINGS: Flexibility is the key to comfortable furnishings for use in an apartment when you plant to move into a house sometime in the future.

ETAGERES AND A SOFA BACK TABLE combine to provide a wall with visual interest. They are a good investment because each piece can be used separately in another setting.

Factors to consider about floor plan of home

Proper design of a house, particularly the interior layout — the floor plan and relation of use areas one to the other — is a highly important consideratin if a home you acquire is to provide you and your family with full living satisfaction, pleasure and convenience.

These needs and desires, of course, will differ among families. And it may be that you cannot achieve the ultimate in convenience and satisfaction in your first time around as a home buyer. You may have to "upgrade" into this achievement, perhaps because of not being able to afford just what you want as a first-time buyer.

And, along the way, you may discover elements and factors of desirable design and convenience that may not have previously occured to you.

A question to ask yourself is can you recognize a well-designed house? Many people can't, even though they think they can.

Another question is whether you are familiar with the wide variety of not only architectural styles but also floor plans and interior designs that may contribute either to daily annoyance or to welcome convenience.

For advice on interior design, we turn to a man who has made an in-depth study of it. There are some general guidelines.

The expert is Henry S. Harrison of New Haven, Conn., who has published a book, "Houses: The Illustrated Guide to Construction, Design and Systems," reportedly a bestseller.

Harrison's approach to the matter is to think in terms of "zones to a house."

"A good way to think about the interior layout of a house is to divide it into zones," he writes. "The private, sleeping zone contains the bedrooms, bathrooms and dressing rooms.

"The living-social zone consists of the living, dining, recreation rooms, den or enclosed porch.

"The working-serving area zone is the kitchen, laundry, pantry and other work areas. In addition to these three zones, there are circulation areas consisting of halls and stairs, plus guest and family entrances."

It is the relation of these zones, one to the other, that contribute to daily living convenience and satisfaction. They should be separated so as not to interfere with activities in another. Yet, easy access from one to another is important.

Harrison feels that the working-service zone is the nerve centre of the house and the relationship between the kitchen and the other areas is the most important key to good interior layout.

From the kitchen, he notes, it should be possible to control or observe both the guest and family entrances, as well as have access to the private sleeping and living-social zones, plus activities in the porch, patio and backyard areas.

"As difficult a requirement as this may seem," says Harrison, "it is not impossible."

An important convenience feature to look for, Harrison notes, is that the family entrance be from the garage, carport or breezeway into the kitchen or a circulation area directly connecting to the kitchen. With groceries and other things to tote from the family automobile, this is an obvious step-saving convenience. Harrison, however, feels that traffic from this entrance should not have to penetrate the work triangle of the kitchen.

He notes, too, that the home's circulation or traffic pattern should be such that it is possible to move from the kitchen and service zone into the bedroom zone without going through the living room or guest area.

Although the author concedes there is no such thing as a perfect layout for all familiies, there are, however, some common layout deficiencies of which you should at least be aware even though you may not be able to avoid all of them.

For instance, he objects to the front door entering directly into the living room, the lack of a front hall closet, no direct access from door to kitchen, bathroom and bedrooms without passing through other rooms and a rear door not convenient to kitchen and difficult to reach from street, driveway and garage.

These are just a few highlights of Harrison's treatise on housing construction, design and system. The book, with illustrations, goes into much more detail and discusses the whys and wherefores of factors to consider about the design and construction of a home. For a prospective home buyer, it is well worth reading.

The book, "Houses," is published by Realtors National Marketing Institute, 430 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60611, at a price of $12.

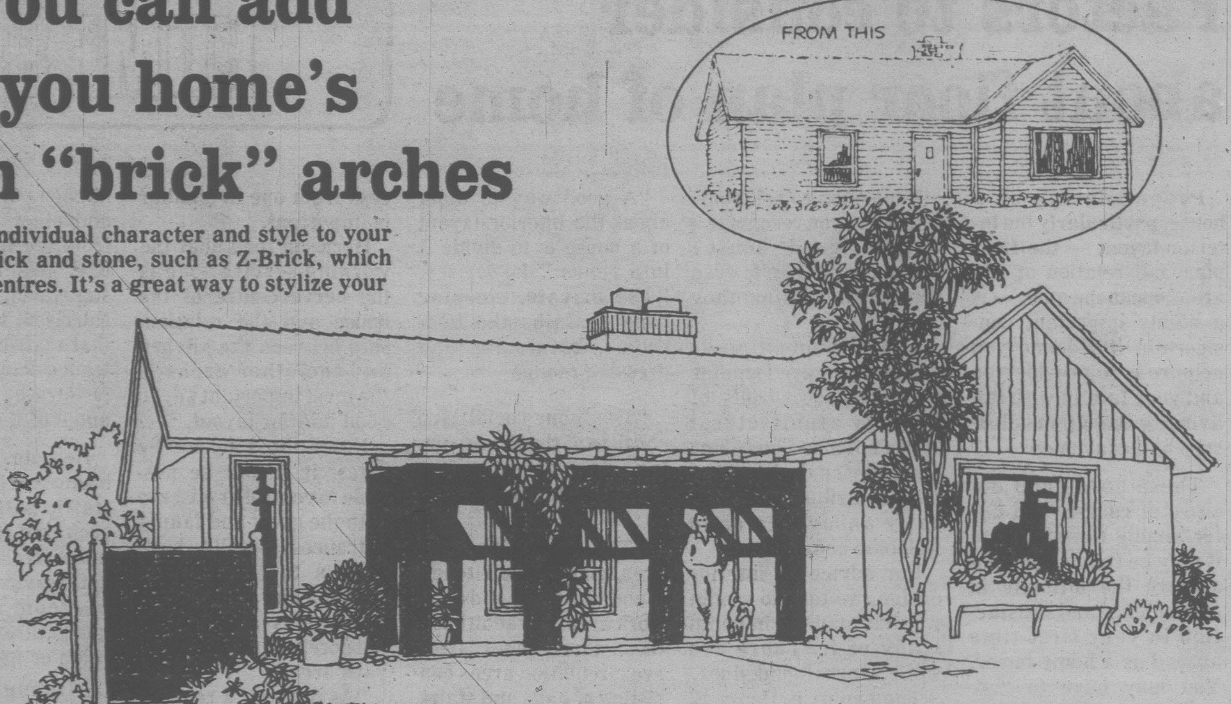
Here's how you can add character to you home's exterior with "brick" arches

Here's a great opportunity to add individual character and style to your home. Frame it with exterior facing brick and stone, such as Z-Brick, which is available at local lumber and home centres. It's a great way to stylize your home without a major addition.



For easiest assembly, plan your post supports to be 12½" square. This will give you brick courses that will work out to one and a half bricks to a course. Even the arches will be presized to assure uniform brickwork.

Make sure to plan height of each arch unit to fit under the existing eave height of your home. This clearance should be at least seven feet at the arch apex. The vertical posts should be firmly anchored to existing deck or make arrangements for concrete footing pads.

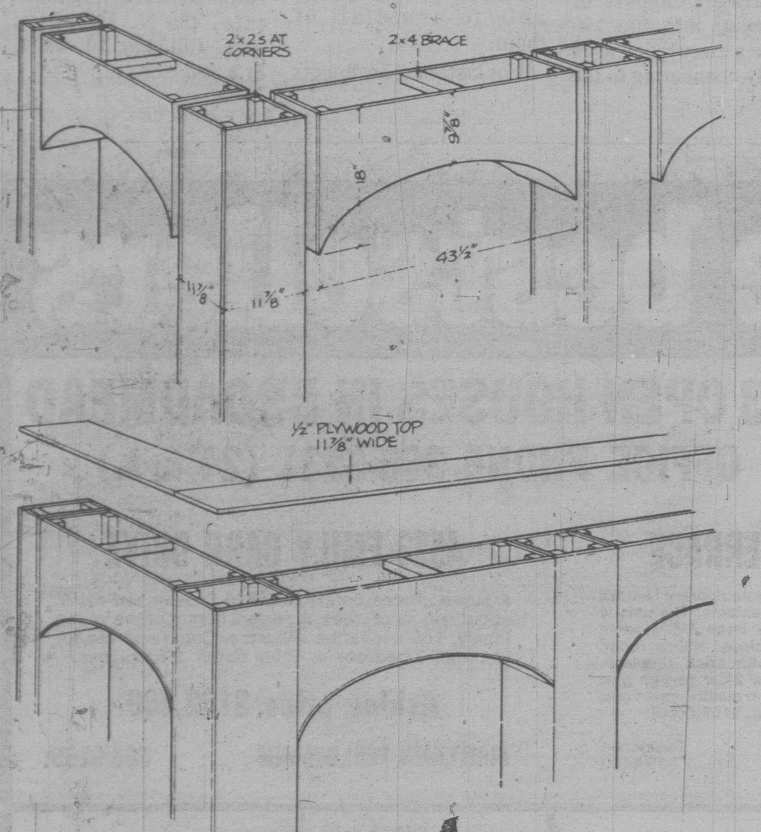
Construct vertical post units from ½" exterior grade plywood with 2"x2" corner stiffeners. Assemble with glue and nails.

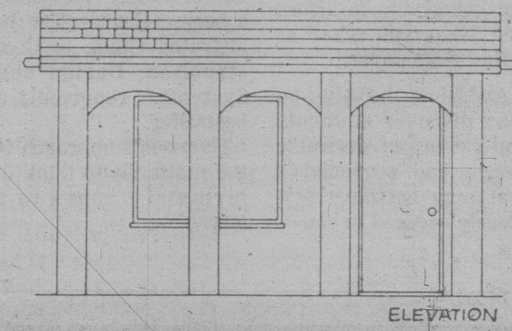
Provide for anchoring to deck or pads.

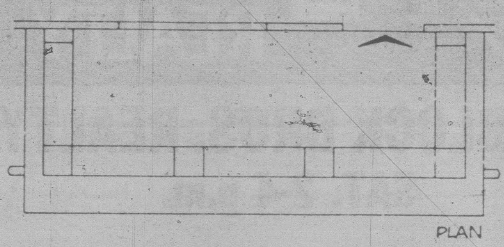
- Arch units assembled from ½" exterior grade plywood with 2"x2" corner stiffeners. The inside curved edge of the arch can be covered with ⅛" plywood or tempered masonite.

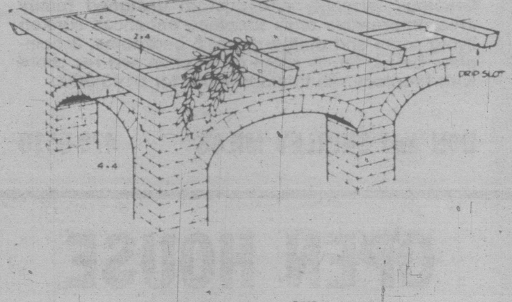
Assemble by bolting or nailing the arch units together per illustration.

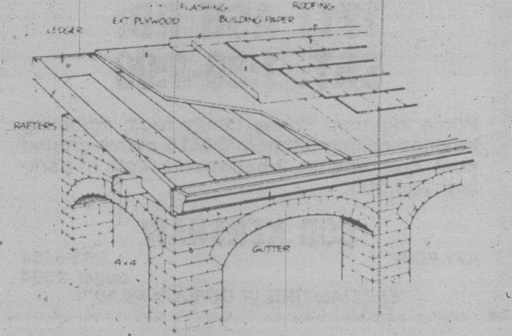
- Cap assembly with ½" exterior plywood cut to dimensions desired. Seal the plywood. Apply brick per plans. Finish roof per illustration . . . open or covered.





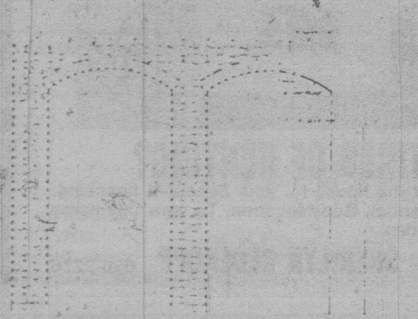






CLOSED ROOF
Set up 4x4 beam by toenailing to top of arch wall. Attach 2x4 ledger board to house wall. Cut and add 2x4 rafters, centered on 16". Sheath with ½" exterior grade plywood. Apply building paper, flashing and roofing as desired. Finish with facia board and eave troughs.

OPEN ROOF
For outdoor patio/plant hangers. Cut prestained or painted redwood or cedar beams (4x4) and assemble per drawing. Have the beams hang out a little over the bricked area.



ARCH BRICK DETAIL
When bricking the arch, start at the centre top of the arch and install the first brick. Then go around the arch installing full bricks, until you are on the horizontal. Then just stack the bricks down the entire vertical dimension of the unit. Fill in by running brick courses up to the mortar line separating regular courses from the stacked bond.

Shows You How!

We have a free, easy-to-understand, step-by-step pamphlet that is designed to show you how to cut your own meat from the 'wholesale' cuts offered. There are two main advantages in buying meat this way. First you get a lower price per pound (or kilogram) because you are going to do the 'work' yourself and secondly you will be able to 'custom cut' the roasts, steaks and chops to the needs of your 'family.' Whatever the size of your family or whether there is just one or two of you, buying meat in this manner is both practical and economical. You can cut, wrap and freeze the packages of meat that are just right for you. All cuts could be made into all roasts or all steaks. As you gain in experience you will be able to cut the meat to exactly suit your own tastes. Watch the Mona Brun Show Wednesday, February 20 on BCTV for cutting demonstration

GRAINFED AGED BONELESS BEEF
APPROXIMATELY 18 LBS.

Bottom Round

Eye of Round included.

Canada A lb. 2.39

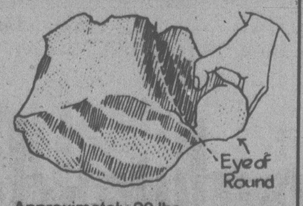
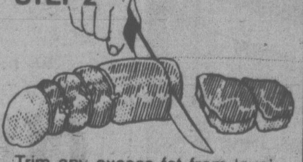
Here is an example from the pamphlet

Bottom Round (Including Eye)



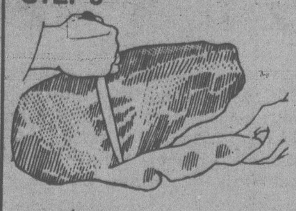
Approximately 20 lbs.
BEGIN by cutting out the 'eye' of the round along the dotted line.

STEP 2



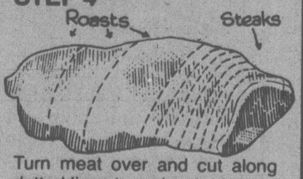
Trim any excess fat from 'eye'. Beginning at the middle, tie with butchers' string about every 1" to one end, to make round eye roast. Cut steaks 1" thick from other half.

STEP 3



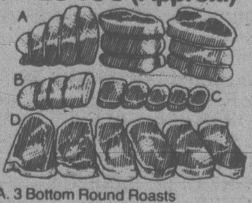
Trim the layer of fat from the main portion of the bottom round along the natural seam.

STEP 4



Turn meat over and cut along dotted lines to make steaks and roasts. Roll and tie roasts every inch with butchers' string securely with the fat covering on the outside.

GIVES YOU (Approx.)



A. 3 Bottom Round Roasts
B. Round eye roast
C. Round eye steaks
D. 7 Bottom Round Steaks
